As evidence that the little folks sometimes get at the heart of things even better than many of their elders, a member of the faculty quotes the following interesting conversation between a Nebraska mother and her nine-year-old daughter:

Little Daughter—"Mamma, papa is a tyrant, isn't he?"

Mother (surprised)—"Why, what makes you think that?"

Daughter—"Because he's an 'absolute ruler.'"

Mother—"An absolute ruler?"

Daughter—"Well, he is a little tyrant, anyway."

Mother (smiling to herself)—"What makes you call him a 'little tyrant?'"

Daughter—"Because he rules over a little domain."

Mother (wondering what the child means)—"Why, how do you make that out?"

Daughter—"Why, he rules over his fields, mamma, his fields."
