Editorial Remarks

This afternoon and tomorrow the baseball team will line up against the Nebraska Indians. The red men come with a brilliant record of victories and will certainly spare no pains to secure the scalps of their opponents. A week's rest for the pitcher, and steady practice for the rest of the players, has put the team on its mettle, so that it is in proper trim to go in and increase its number of victories by taking a couple of falls out of the redskins. These games promise to be the most interesting and exciting to be witnessed on the home grounds this season, and merit a good attendance on the part of faculty and students.

of the contributors to today's symposium, we must decline to accept their implied request that "the non-football playing public let the game alone to work out its own salvation." As a matter of fact, football, and other athletics as well, depend upon public opinion and support for their existence and public opinion is therefore clearly entitled to a voice in the matter of how, when, and where they shall be conducted. We are asked to "show our college spirit" each year, to the extent of from five to ten dollars in entrance fees; haven't we a right to demand something from the performers? The Nebraskan thinks so, mos decidedly, and it must ask the privilege of discussing such questions whenever it thinks there is anything to be gained by it. If the people at large, outside of the players, really want "openformation" play, it will not be very long until they get it. If they do not -and The Nebraskan symposium is merely an endeavor to find out whether they do or do not-if they do not, the "mass play" will continue indefinitely. Most assuredly, "the non-playing," but admission-paying "public" should not "let the game alone to work out its own salvation." They are interested in the game, and have a right to a voice in its conduct. Let them express themselves.

expressed themselves as being opposed to co-education; among them Henry Finch and President Eliot of Harvard; hile others, among whom are Presient Jordan of Leland Stanford, and resident Draper, have favored it. The ecent action of Chicago in segregat ng the men from the women has reewed the excitement.

Explanations for the change have een several. Likely the most imporant reason was a social one. Again, he reason has been given that the men ave been unable to meet the competiion of the women, and the change was hade to relieve the men from embarassment. A third reason has been hat a certain wealthy man had given quarter of a million to have the hange made.

But the change may be accounted for in certain recent social changes that have taken place. The evolution of the present industrial system has differentiated society and the differentiation is expressed by individuals in increased desires and diversity of occupation. It has also emphasized the difference between the occupations. Therefore, the preparation that men and women follow, and a natural segregation takes place in our universities. This differentiation is shown in the fact that more frequent "stag" dinners and smokers are indulged in by the men, and the many social teas of the women to which the men are not invited. People have aquired more wealth during these prosperous times and so can afford to keep their daughters in school, while the men, lured by the tempting chances for making money, leave.
