Reflections.

These are democratic times. Down where I board, freshmen have been known to eat at the same table with upper classmen. Engineering students, unable to read or write, have hailed electives without apology, and agricultural students with grimy hands, who have spent two years planting radishes or judging steers, sit at meat with the apostles of culture.

Much of the so-called "education" in our modern universities is polly-rot. The motive which induces many to take the work is analagous to that of courting favors from those who are in power. Child study is a good thing. It can often be taken to advantage along with courses in husbandry. Yet men and women who attend night classes in this work, and give it too much encouragement, will in the Great Reckoning be called to answer for it.

Occasionally a person is found on the bleachers or in the grandstand, who thinks he knows more about the game than the captain and the whole team combined. Such knowledge usually shows itself in the form of indiscriminate coaching of the base runners or the man at bat. Such persons would be a great deal better off if they would go and learn something about the game. It is generally conceded that the captain and the men who make the team are qualified to do the coaching themselves, and as there are usually half a dozen or so of them more or less unoccupied, it should be unnecessary for them to call for assistance from the grandstand. Because you may have played on a high school team it does not necessarily follow that you know all the points of the game as played by the 'varsity. There are some things that even you may not understand. Because a batter makes no attempt to hit an apparently easy ball, it is no sign that he is trying to "do grandstand" and it will do you no good to try and make him feel bad. The team has a certain system in its playing, and it is not necessary for the grandstand to understand all its fine points.

There is now much talk among some of the boys about a job for the summer. A great many well meaning fellows who have no other employment contemplate that "nefarious trade" of peddling stereoscopic views. Some of the boys will make some money out of the graft, and some others will make their board—though perhaps they ought not. It is probably an honorable way of bleeding the people; no worse than ten thousand other ways of taking money from those who have a little loose change. And though I have had some twelve hundred invitations to take up the work, I shall hesitate to do so. I am sometimes troubled with my conscience, and once when I was a boy I was converted. I would advise such young men as want to grow rugged and lay up a little cash, to seek the harvest fields of the great west.

Some of Saturday's "knocks" were reasonable, others were ridiculous. Let a few of the kickers look up the matters they deplore and maybe they will find reasons for not taking them so much to heart.
