Editorial Remarks

Through a typographical error in yesterday's issue, Borg was given credit for winning the 100-yard dash and broad jump won by Burg. Tobin broke the hammer-throw record, not the shot-put.

Half a thousand or more high school and other visitors from throughout the state spent a large portion of yesterday on the campus and in an inspection of the University. We hope they felt at home, and left last night or this morning with greater knowledge and liking for their state institution. They will be welcome when they come again, whether their second coming is as visitors merely, or as members of the various University classes.

Next week The Nebraskan will begin the final trying out of its editorial staff for the first semester of next year. The numerous errors which have crept into the paper the past few days sufficiently indicate how many mistakes may evade the care of a staff of nearly a semester's experience. So, for the probationary efforts of the coming two or three weeks an extra measure of charity is asked. The Nebraskan for this semester has been handled in the midst of unnumbered demands on the time and energy of everyone connected with it. Yet the management believes some little improvement has been evident, and asks student forbearance during the farther endeavor to get it into still better shape for next year's work.

Communications

To The Daily Nebraskan:
Since the matter of the location of the new buildings is one of such importance that no decision should be made without full discussion, I would like to make a few remarks.

I can see no important objection to the location of the new physics building between the armory and Nebraska hall, but the proposal to place one or more of the new structures along the south side of the campus is not so free from criticism. At present we have a campus which, when viewed from the south, is one of the most beautiful spots in the city. The north side, of course, is crowded and unsightly. Now, it is proposed to break into the south part of it also, and to obstruct the view by erecting one or more buildings, neither of which, at the prescribed cost, is likely to be very imposing or beautiful in architecture.

It is an evident fact that the University will soon require more ground for expansion. Then why not get it at once and locate at least one of the new buildings thereon, instead of permanently and irreparably marring the beauty of the campus by structures which will not only prove an eye-sore to us, but to many generations of students to come?

I do not see how members of the faculty can ever again consistently or conscientiously urge upon their students a higher appreciation of the beautiful if they do not now vigorously protest against this measure, so diametrically opposed to art and beauty.

I believe this sentiment will be echoed by a majority of those who are truly interested in the continued well-being of the University, and are able to rise above the sordid ideal of immediate convenience.

ONE OF THEM.

One of the most unfortunate "jokes," (if it even worthy of such a name) in the senior annual was the "poetry" entitled "Lucindy's Triumph." That this worthy lady should be made the subject of such a slander in the senior publication is a disgrace to its editors and all concerned. Far better that her virtues be praised and her perseverance and pluck be lauded, than that she be made fun of in such a way. Granted that no harm was meant; that it was done in thoughtlessness; there is little excuse for it. Had the lady at whom the verse was directed been one of the younger students it might have passed; but her age should have been respected—to say nothing of her feelings. No doubt the writer of the article and the others concerned regret what they have done and will guard against a recurrence in the future. But it is time that a line be drawn somewhere. Wit and humor, if of a high order, are worthy of place, but there is extreme danger that they be indulged in too freely, doing injustice to many and hurting their feelings. We do not believe the spirit of chivalry is dying out in the University of Nebraska, and we will hope that in the future we will have no further cause for having this belief shaken.

THOSE who have subscribed for the Sombrero, and who have not yet received their copy, should procure it at once at one of the book stores. The sale has progressed so well that if you wait till school is out you may not get one.
