Editorial RemarksTo the University Public.

In entering upon the work of editing this paper we consider our own individuality of minor importance. It is full measure of honor to us that we have been entrusted with the charge. The place this paper occupies in the University work is a large one, and to meet all its requirements is a consummation greatly to be desired. Toward that end we shall direct our best efforts. With our able corps of assistant editors, and with the well established policy of the paper to support the efforts of the faculty, officers and patrons of the University to further its interests in mind, we take up and hope to successfully continue the loyal and efficient services of our predecessors. The field is not only large, but infinitely diversified and the ways in which the friends of the University can help us are innumerable. In this fraternal work all should feel the bond that unites us and forget not our duty and opportunity. Looking to you much as you are looking to us we extend to you this greeting.

The football management still has a large number of season tickets to dispose of, and every student should provide himself with one before the season waxes older. The present season will be an eventful one, and the games to be played here will all be important in determining whether we can maintain the high standard set by last year's team or not. Both students and faculty should interest themselves in the team's success, and by their presence lend aid and encouragement to the men who battle to uphold the honor of their college on the gridiron.

Saturday's game afforded an excellent opportunity to those aspiring to places on the team to show their merits. All of the most promising candidates were tried out, and the coaches were enabled to judge of their work and draw a line on their capabilities or failings. The fact that the goal line was crossed has no special significance. It merely emphasizes the fact that any light team has a chance to get through the line and secure a touchdown against a stronger team. The regular team must be chosen from a conglomerate mass of material, and it will take some little practice yet to determine just what men are fitted to fill the coveted positions.

Now that registration is over great relief is felt by both the students and the officials in the executive office. The experience has been a trying one for both, and it seems that the system employed was a little unwieldy, although as the best that could be done concerning the limited amount of room available.

Opening of the University.

Never before has our great institution opened her doors for a new year's work with such fair prospects as at present exist. Having passed the stage of experiment she has reached the highest planes of educational advancement and material progress. The time when she looked to others for a model and encouragement is past, and with an individuality all of her own she has taken her stand with the foremost institutions of the west. Other colleges in the land now look to her and following in her wake will profit by her success and learn from her failures.

A university is a composite organization and its highest and best achievements are the attainments of the harmonious and strenuous workings of every one of its separate parts. The measure of responsibility is meted out to the faculty and student body alike and no one in a full realization of its moment dare shirk his portion. The responsibility of every member of the faculty is limited only by his ability, and the responsibility of the student is limited only by his adaptability. The former has passed through his periods of trial and from the point where many began he has advanced through every stage of development, and as the throng that accompanied him has melted and fallen away in the heat of the conflict he has come out upon the plane of higher development to which all who have attained are leaders by right of conquest. But while they have risen to leadership their responsibilities have been increased, not diminished; for the destiny of many is in their keeping.

The student of the university is high upon the pathway, but the summit is yet in the distance. He has looked forward with longing to the height where he now stands, but his progress is only begun. Let every student act as in years gone by he dreamed he would do when he reached the university. Let him bring here his early ideals and not be ashamed of them. Let him remember those who perhaps are making sacrifices to keep him here and if he is true to the ideals of his childhood, mindful of the prayers of those at home who, though absent, care more for his success than he himself, and if he is loyal to his best instincts and his most exalted longings, we need have no fear for the result.

At the beginning of the school year each student should make a resolution to keep in touch with University affairs during the whole course of both semesters. As an aid to keeping this resolution no better means could be devised than of subscribing for The Nebraskan. This paper is upon a solid financial basis and has the support of the greater part of the faculty and student body. We will run our paper on newspaper principles and intend to publish regularly throughout the year. Hence no one need be afraid of not receiving his paper regularly during the course of the present year. We simply offer a business proposition to the students and our staff will use its best efforts to produce a paper that will cover the entire field, both news and literary, of University life.

Down in Missouri and over in Iowa the coaches are quite cheerful over the football prospects, and glowing reports are forthcoming from both of these places of their expectations of success. At both colleges most of the old men are back and the problem of developing a team greatly simplified on that account.
