Messrs Cotton and Zimmerer, both '06, furnished entertainment for the campus yesterday by appearing in picturesque costumes and exhibiting themselves in various places, according to the directions received at the Sigma Chi house. Mr. Zimmerer was attired in a really handsome cowboy suit, a broad-brimmed slouch hat, leather breeches, fancy vest, and had the inevitable lariat. He attended his classes as usual and created the "sensation of the season" at chapel.

Mr. Cotton was dressed in a clown's attire. He favored the campus with an impromptu address from the large rock east of the library.

IN OTHER COLLEGES

To a case of flagrant plagiarism, "cribbing," the attention of the college world has been called this summer. The leader of the class of '03 at Brown, a Jew, who worked his way through college, and who arrived in America only a few years ago, delivered a commencement oration on "Anti-Semitism," which made an unusual impression and which won him the $100 medal given for the best oration delivered at commencement by a member of the graduating class. It appears that the oration was plagiarized in a large degree from an oration given at Hamilton College, N. Y., some years ago. The University has withdrawn the medal.

Eleven applicants for admission to Princeton this fall were debarred by the enforcement of the faculty's new rule which permanently shuts out of Princeton any person detected in dishonesty in the entrance examination. The requirements for admission are this year higher than before. Of 550 applicants only 399 passed the examinations.

"The Pennsylvanian," the daily paper at the University of Pennsylvania, has suspended for lack of financial support.

The University of Chicago had on October 6, registered 700 fewer students than last year on that date.

President Butler of Columbia, calls for $10,000,000 more endowment. The university's property is already valued at $26,000,000.

The last number of the University Studies contains a 25-page article on "The Variation and Functional Relation of Certain Sentence Constants in Standard Literature," by Dr. Robert E. Moritz. Among other things Dr. Moritz discovered that the sentence constants, such as the average number of words per sentence used by an author, the average number of predicates per sentence and the percentage of simple sentences, are inter-related. In particular it is shown that the percentage of simple sentences used by English authors varies inversely as the square roots of the corresponding predication averages. The paper is a curious illustration of the possibility of applying mathematics to the solution of literary problems.

Material for Historical Society

Two notable cards of Indian relics, consisting of very artistically chipped flints, were recently placed in the reception room of the Historical Society by Mrs. Robert Gray of Schuyler, Neb. These relics were gathered on the "Gray Site," which is situated two miles north of Schuyler, on a slight elevation which divides Shell creek from the Platte river. This Indian village site is a half-mile wide and three miles long. Upon its surface may be seen indications of earth-works, broken pieces of pottery and flint spawls, together with many perfectly formed implements of flint and other stone.

Nothing can be found bearing on the history of this site in any published work so far as consulted. Long, in his expedition of 1819, does not mention an Indian site at this point, although he must have passed within sight of it. It has every appearance of having been occupied not later than 1775.

The implements found here are very interesting and unique. Some of them differ materially from any found elsewhere in the state. They show a very high degree of skill and are formed of material from widely scattered localities; the blue chert, from the Ne-hawka flint quarries on the Weeping Water, predominates. Green quartzite from the Niobrara river is abundant. Brown Jasper from the Republican river forms the material for many very fine specimens and the poorer quality of chert, from the Kansas valley, is also found there. There is also a chance specimen formed of agatized wood, obsidian, and other Rocky mountain materials.

One specimen deserves special mention. It is formed of green quartzite chipped into the rude form of a turtle. Another specimen, of which there are a large number, may have been used for an awl with which to sew tents. It is of good material, about a quarter of an inch in diameter and from one to three inches in length.

Mrs. Gray has been very diligent in gathering specimens from this site, and the collection which she placed in the Historical Society is but a small part of the material which she has collected.

E. E. Blackman of the Historical Society, explored the "Gray Site" last spring and gathered a number of interesting relics. He is still pursuing the study of this site and hopes in time to determine the tribe which occupied it as well as the approximate date at which it flourished.
