We Mourn Her Loss.

There are problems in life that we, in full recognition of our own frailty, would always avoid if the necessity for meeting them were not rudely thrust upon us. Like a boatman drifting in the moonlight down some gentle stream with the drooping willows bending low on either side to bathe their foliage in the water, and with no breath of air or chill of atmosphere to break his reverie, he dreams of happy scenes and thinks that all is well, but starts up in fright as the roar of a cataract below strikes in upon and disturbs his fancies, and bending to his oars, strains with all his might to reach the nearest shore and safety; so we, pursuing our daily tasks, start and cry out in horror and in sympathy as some undreamed of calamity falls to the lot of some fellow creature and like a sharp blast from some unexpected quarter pierces through our outer cloak and chills our inner being.

Such an event was the tragic death of Pansy Ballard. By this time the particulars have been heralded broadcast over the land under scarce beams in every paper that lays claim to enterprise, and it would be a waste of time for us to delineate upon the details with which all are familiar.

It will be dwelt upon with avidity by the morbid minded, and the superstitious and unbelieving will be given another mystery to wonder at, but the sober-minded student, who fears no truth and whose logic knows no pity in its deductions, will have already met and conquered these questions himself, and his attitude will be all sympathy. We can not pass judgment upon those whom we think have acted unwisely and even madly for we know not what they have suffered, what gods have overwrought the imagination and paralyzed the victims with fear, or what delusions—it mayhap they were pleasant—have lured them on to destruction. We can but pause in our onward march to bury our dead, and in the midst of heaps of flowers wet with sympathizing tears can resolve to come into closer communion with the living, and putting away all unselfishness, to enter into the lives of those about us with a renewed and yet chastened spirit of love.

We will remember the departed one as a fellow student who shared the same sorrows and carried the same burdens, who rejoiced when we rejoiced and mourned when we mourned, and though we would shade our eyes and seek to pierce beyond the mist that hangs over the river of death, we can not. We can but believe and rest in an abiding faith that all is well with those who have suffered here.

Juniors Meet and Appointments Are Made.

President Brown called a meeting of the class of 1905 Monday morning in U. 106 to discuss class athletics. Last year's football men gave brief talks and the appointment of football manager and captain was left to President Brown to be announced at an early date in The Daily Nebraskan.

Messrs. Driscoll, Beers and Chessington were appointed to constitute the class athletic board.

The matter of the annual Junior Prom. was taken up and merely to give the class the opportunity to sanction such an event it was moved that the class give a Junior Prom. President Brown then appointed A. H. Lundin, chairman, and W. D. Green, master of ceremonies. The remainder of the committee will be appointed later.

It was moved to appoint a committee to secure appropriate class caps, and the class adjourned.
