Editorial Remarks

But one day remains before the game with Knox. Though the time seems short much can be accomplished. And indeed, much has been accomplished. The mass meeting yesterday morning came the nearest to bringing out the true spirit of the student body of any similar meeting yet held this year. The seriousness of the situation was presented in its strongest light, and the attention of those present called to the lack of college spirit in a forcible manner. And while we are sure that this meeting has had a good effect we hope that influences have been set at work that will result in a large increase of financial support.

It would be suicidal for the students of this University to allow the splendid football prospects that the future holds out, to be spoiled, through lack of college spirit. We have every incentive to rouse us to a spirit of frenzied enthusiasm over the achievements of our team, both at home and abroad, and it is a shame to us that we have shown so little appreciation. How can we expect to have a great team in all future years if we fail to support the one we have now? What coach of the highest standing and greatest ability will devote his heart and soul to developing a team in an institution where interest is dead when better prospects are open to him? What incentive will there be for men to come out and train day after day and then fight the battle for their institution, straining every muscle and risking personal injury? Think over these questions, and note the analogy to the present situation.

Everyone takes it as a matter of course that Knox will be beaten. They do this because they have confidence in the strength of our team. And that is the very reason why they ought to support it. A team that can travel as far along in the season as our's has without sustaining a single defeat, is entitled to the generous and united support of all University people. Let us give it, thereby dispelling the cloud of gloom that hangs over the future of football in this institution and let the life-giving rays of sunlight rouse into activity the dormant potentialities embraced in college spirit.

Let every rooter strive to be fair in tomorrow's game. Though knowing well the gentlemanly spirit of our rooters, it is strongly urged that they strive to refrain from drowning the signals of either team, as might be done through inadvertency unless great care is exercised. Let no unfair advantage of any kind be taken of the opposing team. Let them receive as fair treatment as it is within our power to extend. A spirit of fairness always works for the good of the game wherever it is displayed. And we are glad that thus far neither ourselves nor the teams we have met have had any occasion to find fault with the conduct of our rooters. In light of the unsavory conduct shown by some of our neighboring institutions toward visiting teams, it is essential that we should keep our record clear. We want no team to go away from here with a just complaint of unfair treatment, and we are sure that none will ever have the occasion.

Buy a ticket to the game tomorrow. Do so if you have the means. There has been enough talk. Now let us all do our part. We can in this way remove all menace to our football prospects, and the game will certainly be worth the outlay. Knox has not by any means resigned herself to defeat, and hers is a team which we can fear with good reason. But this matter has already been presented in the strongest and most emphatic light. Buy a ticket and contribute your share toward easing the present difficulty. Buy a ticket.

The young women in the University should not neglect attending the teas given regularly each week by the ladies of the faculty. These events are of a pleasant and social character and will enable many young women to meet each other, thus promoting a widespread acquaintance that could not be promoted in any other way. The ladies of the faculty have a truly commendable end in view in giving these teas, and it is certainly their due that attention be called to the good work they are doing.
