Editorial Remarks

We have opened our columns to a discussion of the "Hack Question" by University students, and the first of the contributions that have been prepared on this important subject will appear in tomorrow's paper. We find that the statements made in yesterday's paper represents the feeling of a large number of men who desire to see some definite conclusions arrived at. The question is one that should be given publicity and a thorough agitation of it will produce a remedy. It is therefore with this object in view that we invite opinions. All University students who are interested in the matter are welcome to express their opinions through the columns of The Nebraskan, no matter which view they may hold. However, we would advise all contributing to confine themselves to the facts in the case, giving their own views independently. Opinion are wanted and reasons that will stand. We ourselves will maintain a neutral position on all the communications, unless statements that have been made by us are brought under discussion and explanations called for.

We advise our readers to pay particular attention to the changes in courses that are being announced from day to day in The Nebraskan. There is apt to be something there to interest you, and simplify the complications now pending in making out your schedule for next semester. It isn't a bad idea to keep posted and you may find something to your advantage.

In spite of the fact that next week is examination week, bench work is being indulged in upon a large scale. It may be that in some cases the two facts have no connection, but in others there is an intimate one. A calm, serene day in January has as bad an effect as a typical day in spring for bringing the inmates of the library and other buildings about the campus forth into the open air to enjoy to the fullest extent the favorable climatic conditions. The benches afford the most convenient resting places and are certainly being put to good use. However, the return of cold weather will temporarily put an end to the manifestation of such alarming symptoms, and not until spring opens up in earnest will the critical stages be reached.

Tomorrow night the Art Exhibit will close. Hence a very limited space of time is left for those who have not yet taken occasion to go in and see the sights to do so. And no more fitting of special time is available than tomorrow night, when the Stockholders' Rally will be held. This meeting is an important one and it will be full of interest owing to the special program that has been prepared and the social time that will be afforded.

The Art Exhibit has aroused a large degree of interest among University people this year, but certainly not more than was its due. The high standard of the works brought here brings to our doors an opportunity for culture and education if we will but show a receptive tendency. This fact is becoming more generally realized and with this gradual realization comes an increasing interest in art. We hope to see the time when the University will have an art gallery of its own, and it is not unlike that the passing of a few years will see this desirable result accomplished.

For Prospective Teachers.

The following discussion has been prepared by the University Teachers' bureau and is for the benefit of those students in the University who expect to teach in the future:

"How should public school teachers regard the matter of dancing and card playing? This is a question which does not always receive serious consideration by many of our University students who adopt the profession of teaching. A number of young women have lost their positions this year and last because of showing undue interest in dancing and card playing. Perhaps the teacher is not always to blame, because on going to a new town she finds social people taking a part in these functions, and these are the people with whom she is likely to form an acquaintance. She receives invitations to card parties and dances, which she accepts, thinking that the community is socially inclined, and to decline such courtesy would be detrimental to her own interests. Later on these same persons who have encouraged her will question her right to devote so much of her time to society, the result being that she soon finds her services as a teacher no longer desired. "While living in Lincoln or other average city a student may not be criticised for activity in society, but of a teacher in a smaller community there is much expected in the way of model conduct and a conservative attitude on her part will in most cases be the part of wisdom."

Union Program.

The following program will be rendered this evening at the meeting of the Union society:

Instrumental solo, Miss Lowe.
Readings from Eugene Field, Miss Emma Melick.

Vocal solo, "A Winter Lullaby," Miss Minnie Marquardt.

"Experiences in the Black Hills," Mr. Crouch.

Vocal solo, Miss Kaufmann.

Reading, Mr. Sawyer.

Critic's Report.

For One Oration.

At their last meeting the Phi Beta Kappa chapter made a pledge of $100 to the Temple Fund. A committee was also appointed, to confer with the Sigma Xi society and the Alumni association, with a view to uniting hereafter in bringing one orator here instead of three. In this way expenses would be cut down and one joint meeting would take the place of three, thus concentrating the interest of these bodies into one large movement. It is planned that they combine in meeting expenses, each paying a proper share. It is also planned that societies should take turns in choosing the orator. Several have expressed their opinion that such a course would be satisfactory to them and await the action of the committee with interest.
