PROF. SMITH SPEAKS.

Addresses Students on Medieval Abbeys and Cathedrals.

Professor Smith of the department of education, delivered an interesting and instructive address at convocation yesterday, on the subject of "Medieval Cathedrals and Abbeys and Their Schools," illustrated by stereopticon views.

He spoke of the breadth of life in these old institutions, calling attention to the fact that we have been inclined to do scant justice to them. As a matter of fact, they were probably as broad for the time as are our own at the present time. They represented the civilization and culture of the times. In an important sense they were the world.

He drew attention to the lines in which their activity manifested itself, including church service, diplomacy, politics, law and medicine. The government drew its skilled servants from the church. The commercial world depended upon the church for business forms. The industrial life of the community was changed to a considerable extent by the efforts of the early churchmen. Everybody speaks of the service they rendered to literature.

The special object of the address was to make plain the relation of the church institution to school life. When one has spoken of the cathedral and monastic schools, he has said all that can be said of medieval education down to the 12th century. The ideal of the school as being the religious ideal in a narrower sense of the word was touched upon. The ideal of religion in its broad sense had not been grasped nor the relation of new ideal which were serving to education.

Professor Smith described the curriculum and method of these schools, showing how meager was the average curriculum and how drastic was the method. He briefly showed the relation of the old schools to the modern public schools in Europe and to the early schools in this country. The term "high school" was derived from one of the schools which was an off-shoot of monastic life. Stereopticon views were shown of the most prominent cathedrals, including Ely, York, Canterbury, Westminster and Notre Dame. These were contrasted with views of modern structures.

H. R. Vanderslice is again in school after a month's absence because of sickness.

H. S. Wilson, the big football player, left school at the end of last semester, as he was needed at home.

C. F. Chase, of Pawnee City, who was a student here last year, is in school again, having registered for the second semester.

The Senior class spent last Saturday afternoon in the rooms of the historical society, looking over the Indian relics and historical curios.

Chancellor Andrews addressed a large body of students at the judging pavilion last Thursday night. The chancellor was given an enthusiastic reception. His topic was "Misconceptions of Education."

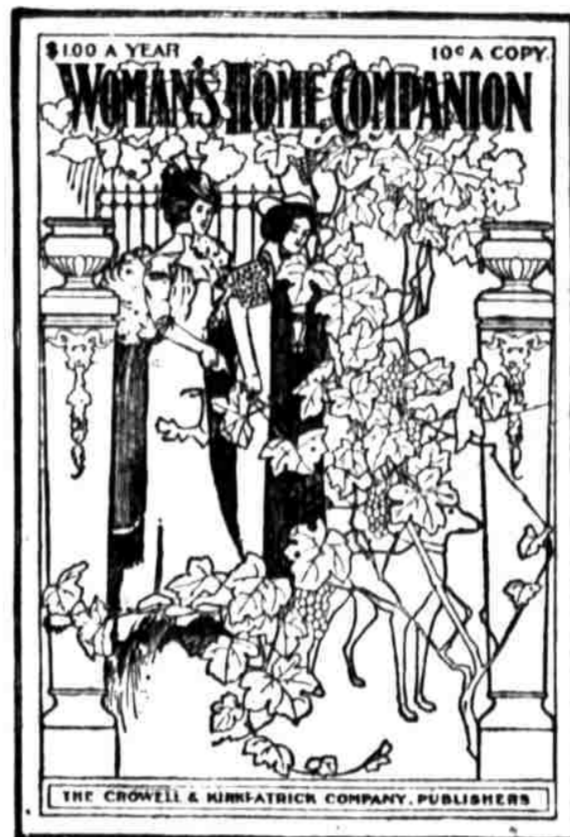

Mr. D. Ward King, of Maitland, Mo., addressed the students of the School of Agriculture Monday morning on the subject of good roads.

Mr. King's plan of building and maintaining good roads is so simple that most of the farmers refuse to accept it. His plan is to drag the road after every rain. He says the most satisfactory drag is made by splitting a log and fastening the halves three feet apart with edges down. This machine is dragged over the wheel tracks at an angle so as to work the dirt toward the center of the road.
