Inter-Class Picnic.

Last Saturday afternoon a party of eight girls, representing every class of the University, armed with bulging lunch baskets, suit cases, and smiles, boarded a state farm car at 12th and O streets. After landing at the farm, and after securing there a baseball, the only article forgotten, the party started on the delightful walk to the woods. This was particularly enjoyable for sub-committee No. 1, whose duty it was to transport the baggage.

Athletic sports of all kinds were indulged in after reaching the grove, and a kodak can bear witness not only to picturesque woodland scenes, but to numerous poses, graceful and unique, as well. Two of the young ladies were especially interested in photography, the success of that part of the entertainment is assured.

At 5:30 the camp fire was made and the potatoes were baking beautifully when, presto—a whistle came floating over the hill, then a trill and presently the whole woods resounded with the wild response. It was three of the party who had been detained.

The girls already there for the time considering themselves hostesses, immediately formed a reception line (?) over the stile to welcome the newcomers. The jollification then proceeded with renewed vigor. New yells were concocted for each class, the one which flashed into the brilliant minds of the Junior representatives taking first prize.

"Alive! Alive! Who's alive? We, the class of Nineteen-Five!"

When the cooks announced that supper was ready, a circle of hungry people was instantly formed, and the baked potatoes, ham and eggs, hot coffee, sliced tomatoes, strawberries and cream, disappeared as by magic. As soon as the toasts were over and sub-committee No. 2 had repacked the dishes a march was made along Lover's Lane to University Place, sub-committee No. 3 bringing up the rear with the baggage. As they neared the village, the college songs, which the trees had been echoing all the afternoon were hushed in order to save the voices for the serenade at Prof. Abaster's home. The professor and his wife were extremely hospitable, and refused to bid the girls good night until refreshments had been served.

A visit to the Wesleyan University building was next in order. The societies and clubs were in session there and for several minutes yells and songs and cheers were interchanged in a most lively but friendly manner. Mr. Farmer, the second tenor of the famous Wesleyan quartet, kindly responded to the request for music, and after a most beautiful half-hour escorted the party to the car.

On reaching the city again the usual call at Rector's was made, and the happy picnickers ended the day with a house party at Baldwin Terrace.

Freshmen Meet.

The Freshmen met in the armory yesterday morning and in the absence of President Craig, Mr. Steiner presided. The object of the meeting was to hear the report of the party committee, which was very favorable. The amount to the credit of the class after all expenses were paid was about $20.00.

After this a few patriotic speeches from the noted members of the class were listened to, which enumerated the great deeds of valor and the heroic resistance offered by the muscular giants of '07.
