Editorial Remarks

Today our campus will be thronged with visiting high school students, and to them our University bids a hearty welcome. We are glad to receive them into our midst and entertain them to the best of our ability, remembering the time when we were completing our preliminary training preparatory to the greater event. About our high school days many of our most pleasant memories are clustered, and it seems to those who well advanced in their college course that a very small shifting of time and circumstances would carry them back to the scenes that are past.

All who have an opportunity to visit the University can be glad of the advantage given to them. Whether they ever expect to attend the University or not it is well that they should know something of its character, equipment and general appearance. But it is a distinct advantage for those who expect to attend this institution in the future, and they can learn much today that will be of advantage to them. In fact for all this visit will be something of an education, and we hope to see this day perpetuated, as it doubtless will be.

Tomorrow is the day of the great track meet with Minnesota and it is to be hoped that every student will allow himself to become interested in this event. This is the first event of this kind in which Nebraska has participated under favorable conditions this year. In fact it is the first time that our athletes will have an opportunity to do themselves justice, as they will be at liberty to exert all their physical powers unhindered by unnatural conditions. As has been shown we have a good chance to win, and a good turnout would better this chance to a great degree.

Any team that Minnesota sends out is sure to be of a superior character, and hence it is plain that the meet tomorrow will be of no small importance. Our men have trained hard of late and are rounding more perfectly in condition than earlier in the year, and despite the odds that they have encountered, they can be depended upon to work hard for victory in every event.

Track work is an important part of athletics. A strong track team is something hard to evolve, because of the many different specialties included. The work is divided among individuals, each having one or more specialties. To work up each part of the system towards perfection requires a great deal of skill and patience. Thus it may be seen that those who have trained the men have had a difficult task to perform, and it is their due that their good work be recognized. It is also the due of the men who have trained so faithfully and well that their efforts be appreciated. Then let all who can come out tomorrow and work with united effort in supporting our men and in according our visitors a hearty welcome.
