Academy Students Sneak.

When the professors arrived at the Academy this morning to teach their early classes they could not understand why the students were so slow about putting in their appearance. They walked around, looked out the windows, rapped their heads to make sure they were not dreaming, or that it was not Saturday, examined their watches and tried to solve the mystery of the tardiness of their pupils, but also an hour or more had gone by and no one came.

After an extended period of loneliness the learned professors got their heads together and tried to solve the problem which was soon cleared up after one of them suggested that it one of them suggested that it was "sneak day."
