A Comparison.

The following, while a comparison of the Yale man and the New York man, is of general interest. Doubtless the western University man would show up as well in comparison with the western business man:

"A member of the Yale faculty, Dr. Bailey, has been collecting for several years statistics as to how a college man spends his money. Some extremely interesting facts are brought out in the report which Dr. Bailey has just issued.

"It is found, for instance, that the average yearly expense account of a Yale student figures up to $1,100. Some men spend as much as $3,000 for a year at Yale while some get along on as little as $300.

"The average Yale undergraduate who spends in a year $1,100 divides his money about as follows: On necessities, which include rent, tuition, board, clothing, laundry, medical attendance, traveling, furniture and minor expenses, he spends an average yearly of about $800; on books, periodicals and stationery he spends $50; on pleasure, which includes theaters, pool and billiards, social functions, flowers, music, society dues, chance suppers and athletics, he spends an average of $200; on tobacco and intoxicants, $50.

"Compared with the same set of figures gained from the expense accounts of unmarried men of about the same age as college undergraduates, but on salaries in banks, shops and business offices, and who average $1,000 a year expenditures, a most interesting result is shown. Where the college man spends 72 per cent of his income for necessities, the unmarried business man spends 55 per cent. Where the Yale man spends 18 per cent for pleasures, the non-college man on the same financial plane spends 31 per cent. The average young business man in New York spends 10 per cent of his total income on wines and cigars, where the Yale student spends 4 per cent. The commonly accepted dictum that the average college man is addicted to cafes, as compared with the young man out of college, it evidently does not hold good from these figures. The New York unmarried man puts twice as much money each year into drinks and tobacco as the Yale man does. The average Yale man spends $28 a year on the theater, where the business man of his own age spends $60. In pool and billiards the New Yorker also spends much more money than the Yale man. A curious deduction from the figures collected by Dr. Bailey is that the unmarried young business man in a large city like New York spends his money in much the same proportion as the richer and more luxurious Yale student."—Brown Book.

Alumni Organize.

University men, members of the high school fraternity of Phi Lambda Epsilon, met Tuesday evening at the Phi Kappa Psi house and organized an alumni chapter of their fraternity. There are twenty men in school who are members of the high school society, and are from the Lincoln High, Kansas City High, Des Moines High, Omaha High and the Brees Military Academy. Of these twenty all but one are members of University Greek Letter societies. The organization is for social purposes, primarily.

The graduate club of the University will meet this evening with Miss Bertha Walker at 536 South 16th street.

Columbia baseball candidates have a piece of training apparatus corresponding to a tackling dummy used in football. A baseball suspended from the top of the cage is hung before the batsman, and with it he is taught how to stand and how to hit properly. Coach Lander introduced the device.
