Editorial Remarks

The Spirit of Investigation.

The west end of the reading tables in the law library is unusually popular these days. The lawyers have suddenly conceived a strong liking for west windows, where the warm mellow light of the afternoon spring sun is most conducive to hard, earnest work, and an uninterrupted view of the baseball game in progress tends to deep mental concentration. Here a goodly number of the disciples of Blackstone study these baseball afternoons; study with commendable zeal, the chances that "Twister" has for making a hit, that "Fen" has for catching a long fly, that "Silent" has to strike out the next batter, that "Cooky" has to send her over the fence. Commendable zeal.

A Good Example.

The Seniors have put themselves on record at last as favoring class management of class affairs and as being against individual graft.

Owing to lack of patronage there was a deficit of some twenty-five dollars reported by the chairman of the Senior Home Committee. Although there was no condition imposed that the class should either gain what was made or lose if nothing was gained the Seniors took action yesterday to assess the men of the class and pay the deficit out of the class treasury.

By taking this action the Seniors expressed their approval of the manner in which their committee had conducted the Prom and took the responsibility of settling accounts upon their own shoulders, just where such responsibility ought to be.

By this action, too, 1905 has set an example to other classes, the example of class management of class affairs, and the elimination of all possible individual graft. This step should have been taken four years ago, but it is better taken late than never.

A. the same year, has been appointed to a position in the Child Study Department of the Chicago Public Schools. Mr. Bruner was offered a fellowship in the University in 1904, but declined, to accept a fellowship offered to him by Columbia University.

The fence around the space where the Administration Building will be erected has been finished. The contract for all of the material which has to be made to order for the building has been let. The brick has also been selected, and the work on the structure will be pushed. It is expected that the building will be finished early in the fall.

The Superintendent of Construction is receiving bids on the plumbing and piping work to be done on the Physics Building. Also on the piping for the sewer pipes to connect the building with large sewer on U street. The contract is quite large and some good bids are expected. The piping includes that necessary for the transmission of all of the gases to be used in the building and also that for ten or twelve electric circuits, including the piping for the main lecture table.

All of the mill work and the interior finishings for the building are here and the work will be pushed from now on until it is done.

The State Agricultural College building will be finished in about a week. The building is one of the best school buildings in the state and is finely furnished throughout. The recitation rooms are large and exceptionally well adapted to the purpose for which they are intended.

"Kensington" Fashionable Clothes

We are having a phenomenal sale on the new gray and popular blue suits of the "Kensington" make. If there is one reason more responsible than another for this increased demand for this make, it is because the fit and style is so different from other makes. Not a trace of ready made or commonplace appearance about them.
