That Freshman Election.

The Freshman politicians have gotten down to work, and many are the aspirants for the presidency of the class. Even the question as to whether their natural enemies, the Sophs, are going to get into the first meeting or not is causing the new students less concern than the question of their first leader.

In former years there has invariably been a combination of the Omaha and Lincoln forces which has brought about an election of a Lincoln man to the presidency the first semester and an Omaha man the second. This year the usual arrangement is looked for, although at present the two parties are divided and each is supporting a candidate of its own. The Lincoln aggregation is pushing Miller Benedict for the first place, while Omaha seems to have gotten together on Patterson, and are pushing him hard for the position.

There have always been a number of aspirants from other towns throughout the state, but they have never made much difference in the result heretofore. This has been due to the fact that the students from the two larger towns have always known each other and have been more readily organized for action, whereas the rest of the class comes from a large number of small high schools, and has been unable to combine on any one man. If such a combination could be made, it would doubtlessly win out, for the outside students are in a large majority.

This year it looks as though such is going to be the case. Several astute politicians from small towns have gotten together and have organized practically the entire class, aside from those who come from the two cities, in confident of success in their effort to break down the Lincoln-Omaha combination. The candidate on whom this third party has decided is Clyde Elliott of Central City. The triangular race should be very close, and will be watched with interest by others than Freshmen, especially by some of the older students who were unfortunate enough as not to have graduated from the Omaha or Lincoln High Schools.

Debating.

Interest in debating continues to grow and makes itself manifest by the large crowds in attendance at the meetings of the Students' Club in Union Hall every Saturday evening. The high order of affairs conducted there has even attracted the attention of prominent men from the city.

The parliamentary law practice last Saturday night was complicated, but spirited throughout. After the "scrap," John L. Clark, the parliamentary critic, proceeded to unravel the entangling complications, calling special attention to and emphasizing various points of parliamentary law involved.

During the course of the regular debate the necessity of a National Divorce Law was advocated by Yoder and Sherlock; denied by Paul and Huse.

Among the guests present was Sam Hawthorne, '02, who gave the boys a short talk on the question discussed.

At the next meeting the question for debate is: Resolved, That Labor Unions are justified in their demands for "closed shop." Affirmative, J. M. Swenson, T. A. Brown; negative, A. H. Miller, Chas. Simon.
