"Drill, Ye Terriers, Drill!"

The tyrant has begun his oppression; the un-American system is again in force; the haughty Senior is grovelling in the dust. This is merely another way of saying that the registrar is sending out the yearly batch of drill notices, and many a student has been cast down from the heights of bliss into the vale of despondency. The number of these notices is so large that every class has been visited at least once by the messenger, and whenever an official call comes to a student now, no one needs to ask what the matter is, but silently offers him all the sympathy in his heart, and thanks the gods that he has completed the requirements and is beyond the reach of Uncle Sam's long arm. The registrar's office is besieged from morning to night by a bluffing mob of upper-classmen who try to make the officials think that they have drilled, but have not been credited with it. Finding that this is of no avail, they try the other tack, and throw themselves on the mercy of the kind man, who evidently has lost whatever mercy was originally incorporated in his make-up. The last resort is to demand a blank to fill out, asserting that they will betake themselves to the chancellor himself, and will insist that they be accorded the great privilege of the free-born American citizen to do as he pleases when he pleases. Final results show that they are not quite in earnest when they threaten this step, however, for upon mature consideration they decide that they will submit to being ordered around by an insignificant little Sophomore wearing two chevrons.

The indignation against being asked to live up to the requirements regarding drill has not yet penetrated as far as the debating societies, but it is probable that sometime within the next two weeks the grand old debate will occur on the time-honored question: "Resolved, that compulsory drill is contrary to the principles of democracy." As there can be but one side to this question, there will be the usual trouble in securing any one willing to support the negative proposition. If anyone does present himself as a candidate, he will ever after be open to the suspicion that he wants to be a major of the battalion, and is trying to work up a stand-in with the commandant.
