Chancellor Andrews on Football.

At the tenth annual meeting of the National Association of State Universities, held at Washington, D. C., last week, Chancellor Andrews, president of the association, delivered the annual address, in which he discussed the attitude state universities should take toward graduate work and incidentally football.

Although the association did not come to a definite conclusion relative to graduate schools in connection with state universities the opinion as generally expressed by the members was that such universities are compelled, by force of circumstances, to maintain courses in graduate work if the states are to retain their positions as controllers of public learning. Should they refuse to furnish graduate instruction, it was argued, such instruction would then be left entirely in the hands of an "aristocracy of learning."

Following its discussion on this subject, the association took up the question of athletics in state universities. During his remarks upon this topic, Chancellor Andrews said:

"I approve, under reasonable regulations, all the usual forms of college sport—track athletics, tennis, baseball, basket-ball, football and rowing. Football does not deserve the censure it is now fashionable to mete out to it. The game is strenuous, which is its glory, for young men need training in that quality; but it is not rough in the sense morally assigned to that word. Played under due oversight, football breeds not callousness, but kindness and restraint. As schooling in alertness, courage, self-mastery, motor efficiency, exact discipline and determination to achieve, it has no equal short of the army or navy service. Nothing else in or about college is in these points comparable. Its advantages reach not few, but many. Evils, of course, attach to the sport, as to everything worth while. These are to be deplored and repressed, not exaggerated or paraded. No few of these we ourselves create by artificial and unreasonable regulations on eligibility."

That Chancellor Andrews voiced the opinion of the association taken as a whole is proven by the fact that it tabled permanently the resolution of W. I. Thompson, president of Ohio State University, "deploring the brutality and waste of time" resulting from the game. Upon its adjournment, President Roosevelt received the members of the association at the White house.

The first of the interclass series of football games for the class championship of the University will occur Thursday when the Juniors and Seniors meet on the gridiron to decide who will meet the victors in the Sophomore-Freshman contest. It promises to be one of the most interesting class games ever witnessed on the campus. In spite of the fact that four of the men who played on these teams last year are now on the 'varsity squad and are therefore ineligible, the teams present a strong line-up.

Combining the law and academic teams in football has considerably strengthened the teams. Several "scrubs" will appear in the line-up of either team. They seem about evenly matched in weight and football experience.

The Juniors will hold a rally this morning in the Chemistry Lecture room to stir up interest in the game. President DeYoung will in all probability preside and speeches will be made by a number of prominent men in the class.
