From a Nebraska Alumnus.

Burdett G. Lewis, '04, who was a prominent Nebraska debater, a scholar in economics at the University of Wisconsin last year, and who now holds the $600 Andrew D. White fellowship in political science at Cornell University, writes interestingly to Professor Fogg of his work at that institution. He says:

"I find the greatest inspiration in working with such men as Professors Jenks, Fetter and Wilcox. One cannot help admiring the all towering ability of Professor Jenks. He is so precise and so well balanced and at the same time so unassuming that one cannot know him for a long time. I can now understand why President Roosevelt has leaned so heavily on him.

"I find ex-Ambassador and Mrs. Andrew White very fine people indeed. Dr. White was much interested to learn that I am from Nebraska and talked with me a long time about the University. He said that he considered the rise of Western universities the greatest educational work of the past century in America.

"My training in working up debates is coming into play this year. Dr. Jenks is giving a course in economic legislation, taking up money, credit and banking. It is being done in connection with his work on the International Exchange Commission. We are taking up twenty-four different countries and will finish our work by drawing a bill based on their laws, customs and manners, embodying such changes as seem best to build up a strong monetary system. I am assisting Dr. Jenks and have charge of the work and direct the search for facts.

"In city seminary I am working up the history of the mayoralty of New York city from the year 1686 to the present.

"I am much interested in what Nebraska is going to do in debating this year. I hope she will keep up the good work."

The Andrew D. White fellowship, being one of the most valuable economic fellowships among American universities, is always open to the keenest competition.
