The collection of Petosky stines in the state museum received an addition last week. The foundation of this collection was laid several years ago by Hor. C. J. Ernst, and many additions have been made since. The collection consists of fossiliferous rocks of the Michigan region sectioned and polished in various ways for display and for instructional work.

Second Semester Registration.

The schedules of classes for the second semester have been issued, and may be obtained at the registrar's office. Already the office force is making preparations for the rush of registration week, and to facilitate the work has divided the week as follows: On Wednesday, all Freshmen will register; Thursday will be given to the Sophomores; Friday to Juniors; Saturday to Seniors and unclassified students. Registration without the payment of the additional fee will close at six o'clock Monday evening, February 5th. An exception is made in favor of graduate students, who may register any time during the week beginning the 5th of February.

Classes Consider Plan.

The Juniors meet today in S. 102 and the Sophomores in U. 207 to take final action in the adoption of the plan for the publication of the proposed "Cornhusker." The Juniors met Tuesday for that purpose, but covered only a part of the plan before adjourning. The plan adopted by the two committees seems to be meeting with quite general approval and it is expected to be adopted by both classes this morning.

May Succeed Dr. Harper.

Chancellor Andrews, according to a recent editorial in The Independent, is Dr. Harper's logical successor to the presidency of the University of Chicago. The editor draws this conclusion from the fact that the Chancellor's frank and fearless expressions on public questions make it impossible for him to be accused of truckling to wealth.

From the German View Point.

In his book entitled "The Americans," Dr. Munsterberg, professor of psychology at Harvard University, writes thus relative to the American (college) woman:
"The man pushes the baby carriage, builds the kitchen fire, and takes care of the furnace, so that his wife can attend to getting fashionable clothing; he denies himself cigars in order to send her into the country in summer. And she takes this as a matter of course, for she has seen this done from her childhood by all men."
And the professor ought to know.

Still At It.

The University of Kansas, after three successive defeats at the hands of Nebraska debaters, has taken up Baker College, a Methodist institution of some 800 souls, near Ottawa, Kansas. Relative to the debate to be held between the two schools this week, The Kansan prints the following editorial:
"Now that we have decided to have a debate with Baker, the male population of Kansas University should get its pugilistic tendencies under control so that when the Methodists come nothing will be done derogatory to the dignity of Kansas University. There is an inexplicable longing, way down in every Kansas University man's heart, when he sees a Bakerite, to steal his hat and roll him around in the dust awhile. This is probably a clannish or feudistic tendency that originated ages back when Baker was the first college in Kansas and beat Kansas University at football. If you feel that desire to give the Methodists a good 'walloping' a-coming on, and think you can't restrain it, you go up to Lake View the day of the debate and stay until Baldwin has its normal population again. They will be our guests this year, save up your strength for the evil day next year."
What on earth is there about the Jayhawker climate that makes its men so ferocious?
