Dean Ringer was recently appointed deputy city attorney of South Omaha. This come as a surprise, since the city attorney is a democrat in politics and Dean a republican. But this more than anything else testifies of the sterling qualities of Nebraska's former football star and all round man. That he is making a success of his chosen profession is without a doubt true. Those who knew Dean when in school are not surprised at his rapid advancement, and they only congratulate themselves upon having him as a friend.

Such successes as this more than anything else make the students feel proud of Nebraska, and the men and women she is sending out. These testimonies of the work of the institution tend to make her more and more appreciated by those in attendance. They realize what great opportunities are in store for them if they will only go after them. The spirit of "Nebras-

The students have taken this movement on the part of the faculty in a very kindly way. They know the spirit in which the thing is intended, and are willing to meet it half way. The faculty have in no way antagonized the students and the students are ready to reciprocate this friendly spirit.

THE PROFESSOR'S LOVE STORY.

Daily Iowan Explains a Recent Marriage in the Faculty.

Leslie McAuliff has a new model for his part in the Dramatic club play, soon to be given, and will not need to take Willard as his only instructor. He should at once write to Prof. Hendrixson of Iowa college for pointers.

Two or three summers ago the professor started to seek recuperation after a year of arduous work in the class room and laboratory, in the mountains of Colorado. The little god of love smiled as his victim locked the door upon his choice assortment of test tubes and retorts and chemicals of noxious smells, and sharpened his arrows for the service that was ahead of them.

The professor journeyed westward, all unconscious of the fate that was to befall him; the little god went with him.

The professor mounted a stage for a ride through a mountainous country. There were others on board; among them a young lady. Her name was Miss Elizabeth Bradley. Now it is Mrs. Walter S. Hendrixson. The little god smiled broadly and perched himself upon the driver's seat. At the Juniors.

In the dark brown shades of worry,
Where the Juniors loiter daily,
And the lessons growing heavy
Make their hearts o'erflow with sorrow.

Bright the day and soft the laughter
From the Freshman as he slufeth,
But the day is dark and silent
In the class-room of the Junior.

Come "sad heart and cease repining,"
Toil not on the 5th of May;
Fold your books and like the
Arabs—to the State Farm steal away.

Cast your sorrow and your worry
In the dim forgotten past,
Joining hands and hearts as children,

ka forever" seems to be growing stronger every year among the students and such we sincerely hope will continue to be the case.

Today marks a new era in the history of student affairs in Nebraska. Professor Grove Barber, chairman of the committee on student organizations, has called a meeting of all the treasurers of classes and managers of student publications and functions in his office. This list does not include managers of athletic teams. The aim of Dr. Barber in his meeting today is to tell the student managers simply of the aim of the committee and not in any way censure them.

From now on it is safe to say that student affairs will be run on a more safe basis. Managers will be more right moment the horses gave a sudden plunge and darted down the steep defile at breakneck speed. There was a crash; the stagecoach disintegrated; its passengers were violently thrown out. The little god picked himself out of the ruins, saw Miss Elizabeth Bradley with a broken ankle, and the professor, armed with the kit of a doctor, who was among the injured passengers, hastening to her side, spread his wings with a broad smile and hied him away to find other work to do; for now there was nothing more for him there.

But one of the characters in the Willard play, the scheming widow who sought in vain to marry the professor, revealed a great truth which has been further proven by this little chapter in real life when he said: "No man can carry an unconscious woman in his arms without proposing to her."

But the curtain fell on the "Professor's Love Story" in real life Wednesday in Lineus, Mo., when Prof.
