A Flirt.

"A flirt," well now 'tis cruel, but so they say;
You'd hardly tho't they'd bring so harsh a claim
'Pon one of gentle grace and comely way—
With friends and nature blessed; 'tis all the same.

What is't to flirt? 'Tis theft—to steal—a smile;
'Tis crime—to kill—another's hope for life;
'Tis sin—to lie—in wait, to then beguile;
And too, 'tis wrong—to lead astray—in strife.

But what cares she for all that's said in jest?
She loves to flirt, and takes things at their best
Tho' all the world would clamor in disdain,
Still this fair one would count "the fools insane"

Who'd try this art from her to snatch or wrest;
And he who'd cause her artful smile's to blame.
BOB ADDISON.
