DR. WOLCOTT AT CONVOCATION.

The Nebraska Sand Hills the Subject of His Address.

Dr. Wolcott delivered a very instructive lecture on the Nebraska sand hills at convocation yesterday morning.

"It is the duty of every citizen to become conversant with the institutions and resources of his state," said he, "and as the sand hill country comprises about one-fifth of the area of Nebraska it merits our attention."

Of the two great projects now being undertaken to reclaim this area, irrigation and forestry, the former is generally thought to be the most successful, whereas experience proves that forestry is much more important. This is due to the fact that a forest provides a more reliable as well as a steadier supply of moisture than a system of irrigation ditches and this at a much less cost.

The size of the sand hill country is much greater than the average citizen of Nebraska realizes. Extending southward from the northern border of the state to the Platte and as far east as the Loup, it includes within its confines an area one-fifth the size of the entire state.

As to the origin of the sand hills, Dr. Wolcott said there were numerous theories The most probable one, however, is that they were formed by west winds blowing across the sandstone buttes in the extreme western part of the state and carrying the sand into the valleys whence it drifted into the hills which we find today.

In concluding his address, Dr. Wolcott predicted a bright future for what is now commonly known as the great Nebraska desert. By planting pine trees upon its hills the moisture of the region will be increased, vegetation will grow more abundantly and the value of the country for agricultural purposes will be greatly enhanced. Of course this will take time, a century, or perhaps even longer, but once accomplished the results will amply reward the government for the millions it will have spent in the reclamation. And the surest method of reclaiming the region from its present semi-arid condition is forestry.

Senior Invitations.

The sample of the Senior invitations has arrived at last and orders must be given to some member of the committee at once. At once means AT ONCE in this case, as an order will be sent tonight. Cash should accompany the orders, but if you haven't your pocketbook with you today, give one of the committee the number you want and bring your money tomorrow.

The invitations are certainly neat and nobby and of the finest workmanship. The class colors, the year and the seal of the school are worked into a pretty frontpiece. An engraving graces the second page, followed by the usual invitation, class roll, commencement week program and list of class officers.

The orders can be given today at chapel time in the Nebraskan office or this afternoon in the library. Remember, this is your last and only chance.
