THE REAL THING.

It is one thing to win class honors and social honors and athletic honors, and it is quite another thing to earn honors along lines of scholarship. Or, putting it in another way, and, perhaps, in a more nearly logical order,—scholastic honors are, presumably, and properly, the principal, central ones for the college student, and all others branch out from those in the center. One is attending a university in the first place to work and work hard. Then what honors come with the results of the work ought to stand before any others. Some people, of course, Rhoades Scholarship into which but one representative entered were of the sort that proved a man's scholarship, that required real, thorough, deep-grounded ability to think and grapple with problems, and one passing such a test has won greater honor than one holding every "office" on the schedule. There are some real things in the world and some people who recognize them. Here's to the man who, tho only a Sophomore, represented Nebraska so well in the Rhoades Scholarship examinations!

get side-tracked on the other sort. It sounds a little better in their ears to be called great in athletic or social circles, say, and they put their energies all to these ends to the detriment of their study. But the only sane view, surely, is that which makes these things mere accessories to the one big purpose in the college life,—to become a scholar.

Now this is not meant as a wholesale denunciation of society and athletics and class affairs. They are all right in their place. The trouble is simply this: some people make these the central aim of their college life and their study an accessory. They are occupied first with the pie and pastry end of the menu and too nearly forget the bread and butter part of their nourishment. Pie and pastry are all right to a certain degree, but an over-indulgence in that direction will very likely result in a fit of dyspepsia, if one be normally constituted.

The recent examinations for the tallion is ready to drill on the campus.

Y. W. C. A. Notice.

All members of the Y. W. C. A. will please take notice that a meeting will be held Friday, February 22, during the noon hour at the Y. W. C. A. rooms for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year. All members are urged to be present.

W. Dwight Pierce, '04, is in Lincoln for a week or more, visiting his family and friends in the University. Mr. Pierce is in the division of Entomology and is located at Dallas, Texas, from spring till winter, where he is actively at work on the cotton-boll weevil problem. He has just come from Washington, D. C., where his reports are usually written up. He has met many Nebraska men in Washington and would be pleased to meet all men interested in this branch of work who would like to know something of its practical side.
