CLASS PARTIES.

One is not apt to remember in after years the separate items of each day's routine of classes, the nap in History class, the stuffy air in Political Economy class, the volubility of the German class, and so on all these sink into a confused substratum of the mind and as henceforth beyond identification as single events. They are meant simply to leave a certain bulk with us,—and they do.

Those things longest and most pleasantly remembered in one sense, at least, are those events of such a nature as to stand out from the routine and class fellowship may well be pushed.

EVENTS OF FORMER YEARS.

Happenings of other days as recorded in the Nebraskan:

Four Years Ago Today.

The Cornhusker five left for Minneapolis to meet the Minnesota Agricultural College and the University.

Three Years Ago Today.

The Nebraska five, on their own floor, defeated the Badgers only by a great effort made in the second half, with a final score of 25 to 22.

BIG EXCURSION.

Farm Students Have Great Trip to Omaha.

Three hundred and twenty-five agriculture students accompanied by several of their professors left Lincoln at 7:30 last Friday morning for their annual visit to South Omaha where they inspected the packing houses. The various packing houses had guides appointed to conduct the students thru their establishments and explain the processes of killing animals and preparing the meats for the market. Swift and Company had a complete display of their various products and generously supplied the boys with samples of ready prepared meats. The stock yards were visited and several lots of cattle judged and sorted.

In the evening the students were the guests of the Omaha Stock Yards company and were given a banquet at the Exchange dining hall. Professor Smith was toast-master and the following toasts were responded to:

"The Educated Farmer" by E. F. Sturgis, editor of the Twentieth Century Farmer.
"The Mutual Interests of Packers and Stock raisers," by J. J. Ferguson, stock buyer for Swift and company at Chicago.
"Changes in Methods of Handling Stock" by Mayor J. C. Dahlman of Omaha.

distinctive. And among these are certain social happenings,—class gatherings, athletic events, camps, banquets and the like. They are places where there is fun, pure plain fun, and a good time remains a long time as a pleasant memory.

The various classes seem at present tending toward a most laudable practice of giving frequent "doings" for the members and it should have a great effect in drawing class members together and giving occasion for the future recall of many, not merely a few, distinctively pleasant occasions in the college life.

Of course, there is the possibility of carrying such things too far, of making things one single round of social pleasure, which would be worse than none at all, but that tendency, so far as the class parties are concerned,—has certainly not yet reached the danger point at Nebraska. Anything which tends to cultivate a healthy, genuine spirit of class loyalty

"The Mutton Industry" by J. B. Blanchard of Omaha.

With this excursion ended the short agricultural course given at the State Farm. The course began January 2, and the class was the largest in the history of the institution.

Mr. J. D. Wilson, a student of this University some years ago, visited the Geological Department recently, and related some very interesting items concerning his trip to British Columbia, from which province he has just come. He was greatly attracted by the star fish there to be found, because of their great size and gorgeous colors. One which he procured measured four feet, nine inches across. Mr. Wilson hopes to make a trip there next year and, if possible, to secure specimens of these fish for the Museum.
