Seriously.

There is undoubtedly, a state of mind,—not too religious, for that is impossible,—but too full of a certain morbid spirit which puts on a face of gloomy raptness, knows anything better than it knows the world and men, and which starts a cold chill wherever it goes. People with that spirit are just about as pleasant company as a cemetery on a cold moon-lit winter's night, and fortunately, there is no superabundance of them at the University.

Probably, if anything, we are too lax. Of course it is considered quite proper by nearly everybody to go to let fall asleep again soon after arrival at the University. Presumably, this is a place where the spiritual life should be developed to the highest point—presumably, it is for that as much as for intellectual training that we come here, but these presumptions will be sadly put to shame if inquiry is made in some directions. And there are some reasons, which will occur to every one, why such conditions are found.

EVENTS OF FORMER YEARS.

Happenings of other years as recorded in The Nebraskan:

Two Years Ago Today.

Enthusiastic reception to Chancellor Andrews on his return from Chicago after a short illness.

Junior and Senior class fight having the usual indecisive result, both classes claiming a victory.

More Changes.

Two other changes have been made recently in the line-up of the staff of the Nebraskan. A. G. Schreiber will take the place of W. E. Standeven in the Engineering School and H. L. Wilson will be the medium thru which the paper is kept in touch with the Botany and Zoology Departments, he taking the place of J. C. Elder. Both men retiring from the positions felt their school work too heavy to allow of anything outside.

Astronomy classes have improved the fine evenings of late for telescope work. The Great Nebula of Orion and other, fainter nebulae were well seen in the unusually clear atmosphere of Tuesday evening. The four small stars which lie in a vacant region of Orion Nebula and which seem to have been developed from it, were clearly distinguished.

The "Young Augustus," a Parian marble bust in Professor Barber's office has been collecting too much dust recently, so the professor sent to Chi-the big fashionable church once in a while, to estimate the cost of the plume on the lady's hat in front, to comment on the quality of the baritone's voice, and to notice in an off-hand, noholant manner, you know, that the preacher must be getting much in earnest, for his face really has become very red,—a sure sign always. There is a considerable representation of this class in the University, but you would hardly request the doctor to send for a person thus described if after being run thru with a piece of railroad wreck you wanted a friendly chat with somebody before your relatives received the life insurance. The class alluded to always avoid those places and situations where people become really, seriously, dead in earnest.

The trouble seems to be, mainly, sheer indifference. The spiritual perceptions either are never urged to the point of being entirely awake or are cago for a piece of Argentine cloth to put over it. With the exception of infrequent reflections caused by the sheen of the cloth, the appearance of Augustus is as good as ever.

A propos of the $780,834 appropriation made by the Kansas legislature for that university for the next biennium, the Kansan remarks that while the students have ceased to work over the legislative appropriation, monthly paternal appropriations are still matters of anxiety; a state of mind with which students of Nebraska can sympathize.
