Entered at the postoffice at Lincoln, Nebraska, as second-class mail matter under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Nebraska at the present time takes rather a prominent position in determining the future action of several big institutions in athletic matters. Upon her depends, it would seem, the final consummation of a Missouri Valley League and the schedules of several of the "Big Nine" schools will be affected by the decision of our Athletic Board regarding the "three-year rule."

A good deal of interest is centering about the matter of the representation of the Omaha Medical College on the Cornhusker staff. In this question, just as in any other, there are two sides. From the standpoint of numbers, the school, it would seem, has ample representation as it is, but as a separate and distinct section of the University, there is room for a claim to a representation similar to that of other sections. It is a matter upon which it is easy to take a prejudiced view.

At last the University has a museum of a size suitable for the exhibits that have been in its possession for a number of years. Professor Barbour is to be congratulated upon securing such ample quarters and in equipping them so admirably. To be sure, the building looks from the outside as if it had been built to perpetuate the memory of some company like the Nye, Schneider, Fowler concern, but sometimes it is well to take what can be gotten, and one of these days, let us hope we shall have more substantial edifices like the Temple and the Physics building.

"MEASURING MEN."

R. L. Metcalf of Omaha, Reads Fine Paper at Convocation.

"Measuring Men" was the subject of a instructive and carefully written paper read by Mr. R. L. Metcalf of Omaha, at Convocation yesterday morning. When we measure people, he said, we are too apt to be unjust and narrow forgetting that there are two sides to every question. The army spy who is caught is put to death by the one side and idealized by the other. It is far easier to underestimate men than to overestimate men, and we cannot always judge correctly thru the historian.

When asked to name a traitor, the average school boy promptly replies "Benedict Arnold," yet Arnold gave valuable service to his country at first. George Washington was subject to fits of anger, Thomas Jefferson yielded to tempaations, and Alexander Hamilton, altho much revered was not nearly so admirable in some respects as Aaron Burr. After all, in considering the doctrine of the brotherhood of man, was Aaron Burr measured carefully? Certainly no more beautiful letters were ever written than those he sent to his children.

Two of the big men in history are Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas unlike in many ways. Douglas in his polished manner preached to the heads of the people, but Lincoln reached their hearts altho crude and awkward. They were rivals in love as well as in politics. Theodore Roosevelt criticises former presidents rather severely, calling Thomas Jefferson the father of nullification and therefore of secession. Thus are men measured, both falsely and correctly, regardless of the statement which Emerson makes that, "Every man is a divinity in disguise."
