MELODRAMATIC?

Had you been on a certain downtown street one April evening, last year, you would have seen something probably to make you pause a moment. A certain man was making his way along slowly and unsteadily, stumbling frequently and tottering from one side of the walk to the other. Sometimes it seemed he would certainly fall, but mumbling incoherently and half idiotically he managed to continue on his way.

He attracted considerable attention; several passersby turned and looked after him, a bunch of college men stopped and watched him, talking among inely funny to have the private wink over. And as for stopping at the hotel on the way from breakfast to class, why that is to be taken as a very ordinary, every-day affair, of course.

But just the same, the man who does such things, after having attained a place where he should know better, ought to be boosted so hard that it would make his ears tingle and so hard that he would alight entirely out of sight of the University forever. And further, the name of every man who does such things ought to be pasted in black and white where every student might read it.

Dr. F. D. Heald, Botanist at the Experiment Station, delivered a lecture before the elementary science classes at the High School, last Tuesday morning, on "Symptoms of Disease in Plants." The lecture was illustrated with over sixty lantern slides showing the natural colors and forms of the diseased specimens.

In his class in Greek 26, a series of illustrated lectures on travel in Greece, Doctor Lees has been using a curtain rod to point out the features of interest in the lantern slide pictures. Some kind student in the course taking pity on the doctor, has sent him a nine foot, two joint bamboo fishing rod, to use as a pointer.

Baseball Practice.

A large number of men are getting out every afternoon to practice the National game. As yet the diamond has not been laid out so that the practice is mostly of the batting and outfield order.

Captain Rine says the prospects are very bright for a good team. There are only a few "old timers," but these together with a lot of new material should make a good team. "Ducky" Holmes has the bunch in hard training at present and is hopeful of making an exceptionally good team.

themselves, and it would have been easy to gather from their concerned expressions that they were not talking lightly. Finally, the man,—the young man,—passed a building in front of which an old friend of his was standing. The friend hesitated at first sight of the reeling figure unable, it seemed, to believe his senses; then slowly shaking his head went out to the street laid his hands on the fellow's arm and looking as if the tears were just about to start to his eyes, led him away home.

And why was it all taken so seriously? It was a college man, a young fellow in the University.

Lately, there have been too many reports, vague, half suppressed rumors regarding the escapades of certain University men. It seems to be quite the thing among an exclusive class to take a town at the "rapid pace,"—to get just a little hilarious once in a while, or even go so far as to get unsteady. Nothing like having something genu-
