(Continued from page 1.) standard from the artistic standpoint if I were to give them a separate book. "They say that the Law copy will lose its effectiveness if placed in a department with other University copy. Does the simple fact that other copy comes in before or after it destroy it? It still hangs together and still bears the label; what's the difference? If it has any effectiveness it should retain it so long as the reader understands that it comes from the College of Law.

"They plead that their plan maintains the identity of the college. Does not my plan do the same thing? Everything that they submit for a department of the book will be grouped in that department and labeled, if they desire it. Their pictures are grouped and their joshes and other copy will be grouped in the proper department. This makes their copy stand out above that of any other college of the University. It seems to me that reason will justify no more than this.

"The Law students object to having to look through the book for their part—and wasn't it all bound together so as to have it handy? Does it not seem reasonable that any other student would like the same thing? Ought I to get out a separate book for each college or school of the University in order to facilitate each individual in finding out what the Cornhusker says about him. The whole thing appeals to me as being unreasonable and certainly no more justifiable for the College of Law than for some other college. Possibly their time for looking through the book is more limited and their time may be more valuable to society than that of any other student, but they have failed to prove that these things are so.

"Now, finally, let us consider the financial side. They threaten to boycott the book and say that they will bankrupt our treasury if I do not yield. Let me cite a few figures for the consideration of the students. If they continue to support the publication, they claim they are entitled to at least 125 pages. The publication of the Law copy, therefore, would cost us about $700.00. In order to have the Law department pay expenses under these conditions we must sell about 350 copies of the book in the Law college. Ninety-four Law students are regularly represented in the Cornhusker. I leave the question to the judgment of the students. Who will be the loser if the College of Law withdraws? Who the gainer? The College of Law has gotten out an annual, but they did it by going down in their pockets, a thing that few people believe they will do for the Cornhusker.

"Shall we have a University book or a group of college books bound together? HERBERT G. MYERS."
