GERMAN UNIVERSITIES.
Are They Deteriorating in Efficiency and Breadth?
 In the Bellage zur Allgemeinen Zeitung for January 9, Dr. Rein of Jena reviews a recent book, "Deutsche Universitet und deutsche Zuhurft," by Frederick v. d. Leyer, in which the author takes a thoroughly pessimistic view of German universities. One must not be deceived, he says, by the rapid growth in natural science and medicine, nor by the increasing number of students. Since 1850 the universities have been going steadily to their place. They are today only the highest technical schools for specialists and training institutes for government officials.

V. d. Leyer also sharply criticizes the profession. Independent personalities, he says, are rare among them, but of virtuosos, clever poseurs, unscrupulous office seekers and bureaucrats there is no lack. Their lectures are no longer influential in the building of character, but rather bring about bewilderment, dilettantism and spends knowledge. The physicians on the faculty regard their own practice as more important than their duties as instructors, and have, indeed, condescended to university work only in order to better their social condition and be able to demand higher fees from their patients.

This criticism of German universities is especially interesting because of several recent articles criticizing our American universities. It is noteworthy that these critics have two points in common: (1) Over specialization; (2) The failure of instructors to exert an inspiring influence toward character formation.
