The University public does not realize to a sufficient degree that the University Cadet Band is supposed and expected to be self supporting. It is an organization which is as closely associated to the school life as any while at the same time it is something existing as a part of the institution's working force. In view of the latter fact, it seems that some proposition ought to be made by the authorities for fully supplying the organization with all necessary music, but since this is not done, the student body, in view of its relation to the band, as just mentioned, ought to step in and see keep his balance, it should teach him a good deal in a practical way.

As for the one who never knows such a press of work, probably he will never know it later. Let him rest in peace!

Theta Kappa Nu.

Those Green Hats.

Here and there about the campus may be seen dark green telescope hats with broad white bands bearing the numerals '10. It is a noticeable fact that so far they have been worn only by the feminine element of the Freshmen class. This, however, the Freshmen explain by saying that only the first order of hats has arrived, and consequently the spirit of chivalry prevailed on the young men to stand back and give preference to the fair ones. A number of wicked Sophomores, tho, seem to think it will be necessary for this chivalrous spirit to be kept up by the Freshmen during the remainder of the semester.

Nathan Abbot, dean of the law faculty at Stanford, has been elected a member of the law faculty of Columbia.

that it is not hampered by lack of means.

The one philosophically inclined could easily figure out that there is a big influence resulting from such an organization; it means much to society. What would an army do without its regimentals? So what would dress parade be without the band?

One element in a university course, which undoubtedly has a great influence on the student, but which is not often noticed as a factor in education, is the continuous strain under which any one really getting into the school life works. With the ability to adapt oneself to such a strain, to avoid a mental break-down, and to get thru the work causing it, comes the ability to be effective. The average student knows what it means to puzzle over the schedule of the day, containing twelve hours, with a view to putting in work requiring fourteen. If he can
