CHEAP FAME.

The capture of the Freshman master of ceremonies by the Sophomores seems to be the direct result of a deluded state of mind. This act, like all other similar outbreaks of lower classman enthusiasm of the last two years, is a direct bid for "cheap" notoriety and University hero-worship.

The students who carry out these kidnapping "stunts" usually are seeking to accomplish something that will cause their names to be published in the local papers and spread about school so that they will be in the public eye among the three thousand stu-

time set for the class function, and then allowing him to escape in time to discharge his duties as a member of the dance committee. Such things have gone beyond endurance and now only the people with deluded minds stoop to perpetuate them. There is one motive, however, which would make these kidnapping "stunts" by the lower classmen justifiable.

If the purpose of either class were to advertise the dance of the other by drawing the attention of the public to the function rather than to kidnapping, then it could be tolerated.

When it is clear, however, that the lower classmen are seeking to secure "cheap" fame and not to advertise their dance their action must be condemned.

and don't worry for fear they will drop. The Automatic Eye-Glass Holder consists of a spring-controlled chain winding into a case which is fastened to your coat or waist. The chain is easily drawn out to full length and by a slight "twitch" is returned to its place. 50c to $3.50.

dents at this University. They believe that these little acts will give them not only prominence, but also influence to such an extent that they will rise to be leaders consulted in matters of great importance in the University. When students attempt to secure these ends by such methods, they are after a "cheap" fame and notoriety that a majority of their colleagues shun.

The student body, as well as the faculty, at Nebraska has become weary of these lower classmen acts. They have tolerated too long the "stunt" of kidnapping a class officer on the eve of a dance and holding him until within a few hours of the
