FOOTBALL CHANGES.
Few Alterations Have Been Made in Rules.

The following are the important changes that have been made in the football rules since last year. An increased length of game, five minutes being added to each half. Two umpires, as formerly, will be used, but their duties are defined more specifically. One will act the referee in decisions down the field and is called field judge. He is practically an assistant to the referee. The other has control of the decisions belonging to the line-up.

Forward passing has been so altered as to make it less risky on the first and second downs. Instead of losing the ball if it touches the ground before striking a player, the same side retains the ball, if in either first or second downs, but the team loses fifteen yards in distance. If, however, the ball strikes ground before it does a player on the third down, the ball goes to the opposite side as formerly. A line man may now carry the ball, provided he does not leave his position in the line until after the ball is put in play.

In the use of the forward pass, tripping or hurdling by the side not putting the ball into play in a scrimmage will be penalized fifteen yards.

A man is entitled to a fair catch when it is possible for him to reach the ball before it strikes the ground, the raising of the right hand now being unnecessary.

In order to prevent signalling by one man and a catch and run by another, if one man of the side signals his intention of making a fair catch, and then another of his side makes the catch, the latter player may not run with the ball, nor is he even entitled to the privilege of a fair catch, but the ball must be downed where caught and scrimmage by his side begins.

Questions of hurdling are put within the jurisdiction of the referee.
