The Phantom Laurel.

A peek at the mental processes caused by the statement that South Dakota expects to do up the Cornhuskers.

The same being a light intellectual lunch in honor of the football squad.

Now Bill wasn't really handsome; nobody claimed that, neither were his poor but honest parents, but he was tall and broad-shouldered and his muscles were real tough, and when he loomed up on the football horizon it was like a Beethoven sonata compared to five minutes rehearsal by the recruits in the bugle corps. Indeed, the talent quite generally conceded that he was the find of the year (Standard Oil company excepted).

Although he had never played before, he was developing rapidly under the skillful handling of the coaches and trainers. The second week he was given the signals and now he could run thru the formations with all the style and finesse of an all-American. Albeit (taking liberties with a venerable tit-bit of Chaucer's) his youth and inexperience, he was a hard man to stop and even the seasoned veterans admitted that when it came to pulling him down, the operation was not wholly dissimilar to sticking a needle thru a good, well-developed, healthy flea. His first real try-out was to be in the South Dakota game and according to all reports the bunch from the wheat fields were even stronger than the year before, when the score had been low. Naturally, when Bill got a hold of the facts he was actuated by a burning, passionate desire to light on their star players like a prune salad on the stomach of a hungry freshman.

Well, Bill was put in the game. He caught the kick-off and started for the South Dakota goal and the long straw boys came for him like a bunch of Mississippi voters after an unfortunate gentleman of color for whom they are planning a neck-tie social. When he got up there were several distinct contusions on his little, tender, throbbing dome of thought and he was a trifle dazed. But he ran thru a few plays on his nerve and pulled himself together in time to stop a play now and then.

Two minutes left to play and Nebraska hadn't scored! It was our ball on our own twenty-five yard line, third down, and seven yards to gain!

They called on Bill. He caught the ball and started; he hit the line and went thru the right guard. Smash, and thru two ends and the full back like a dozen State Farm students thru a keg of prunes, and then he started out to run; yes, run! Only one man between him and the goal and seven at his heels! Did he run? Oh, yes, he ran. At first on the European plan, then he changed and went the last twenty yards on the American plan. Just as he went over the line ten men tackled him.

When they got him up, four of the little ivory ornaments were missing out of the front end of his pie shredder.

He came to, slowly. He heard the tramping of many feet. Then he became dimly conscious of some one pounding him and could faintly hear the terrific cheering in the—! x * *

Then he woke up. He had slept thru the entire lecture. He got up and started slowly to his room. As he passed the Conservatory he heard someone playing. It sounded like, "Tell Me, Will My Dream Come True?"

All students who ever felt athletics or have even had a premonition that they would be successful in athletics are respectfully urged to come thru and get onto the job. (Signed)
