THE CORNHUSKER.

The sentiment of the Law School as shown at the mass meeting yesterday is clearly in favor of entering the Cornhusker this year. Both the Laws and the Cornhusker representatives are to be congratulated for this moderation in the discussion of this tender subject. It is the judgement of all now partisans that in the quarrel last year both parties were in fault and had the matter been considered calmly and without personal bias, much trouble would have been avoided. There is no real reason why the Cornhusker should not represent the University of Nebraska and there are many reasons for it truly representing all the colleges of the University without any exceptions. As a business proposition it is easier to secure advertising for one large student year-book than for a number of small ones. Furthermore the local business men have expressed their intention of withholding their patronage from all student publications of this nature except the Daily and one year book. In view of the facts it would seem the part of wisdom not to bring into existence the factions

FORCED TO PLAY.

Students Are Compelled to Engage in Football.

The Americans are responsible for the development of a college in Upper Egypt which is doing so much for the country that it has been commended by the British government. It is known as the Assiout Training College. It was founded about forty years ago, but it now has seven large two and three-story buildings. Its professors come from the best of our colleges, including Princeton and Yale. Between 700 and 800 students, coming from all parts of Egypt now attend this school. The graduates are influential men, and are sought by the government as clerks, for they are found to be trustworthy and of a high moral character.

While the college is a missionary institution, it gives a good general education. The Egyptians appreciate modern school training and want to go to school. They are partial to the English schools and will pay extra to get a modern education.

The president of the college is Rev. John Alexander, D. D. He was educated in America, but he has lived in Egypt for nearly a generation. The school is ably and economically managed.

This college is on the dormitory plan. The most of its 100 students live in the buildings and they are continually under the eyes of their professors. The training partakes somewhat of a military order. The boys must not only go to the class rooms, but they have to attend the chapel, the weekly prayer meeting and the Sunday school. They are also compelled to take part in college athletics. Twice a week they have to engage in football and tennis, and every effort is made to develop them along the lines of our civilization. It is said that they study well and that they are doing good work on track and football field.

Roy Nelson, 1909, returned to school yesterday. He has been on a ranch out in Montana during the summer.

which caused so much unpleasantness last year. If past grievances be kept in the back ground and the energy exhausted in useless strife be directed toward making this year's annual the best thing of its kind, a step forward has certainly been taken.
