Ames had a star in Captain McElhinney who played a brilliant game at end. He was able to get around Nebraska's ends once or twice for short gains and did good work on the forward pass. McElhinney and Hubbard, eleven times in the second half, eight of these being successful attempts.

The entire Nebraska team played an excellent game. The Cornhusker line was impregnable and only once were the visitors ably to make their downs through it. Kroger and Chaloupka distinguished themselves, both on offensive and defensive play. Cooke, at quarter, played the best game of his Cornhusker football career, returning punts and running the team like a general. At end. Johnson and Harvey outplayed their opponents, although pitted against star players. Collins, Matters, Frum, Minor and Ewing showed up fine.

The day was an ideal one for football. It was not too warm for the players and was just warm enough for the comfort of the spectators.

The crowd was the largest of the season. The gates opened at 1:30 and the bleachers were filled before 2:15. The grandstand filled slower and people were still entering there after the game had begun. In the bleachers two hundred rooters dressed in Scarlet and Cream costumes formed a gigantic "N" that showed up well when viewed from the field or grandstand. The rooting was at all times good. Between halves Chancellor Andrews addressed the Nebraska team, telling them they were doing good work and urging them to continue it the second

The game was started a few min utes after three. Nebraska completely outplayed the visitors in the first half but scored only four points, made on a drop kick by Weller. Bad luck pursued the Cornhuskers and although. able to carry the ball down close to the Ames goal several times yet they were not able to cross it. During the second half Ames braced and outplayed the Cornhuskers for a few minutes.

A forward pass which Ames had had no chance to call into use during the first half, was presented, and worked even more disaster to the Cornhuskers than did the pass used by Colorado a week before. Five times the visitors carried the ball to the very shadow of NEW MANAGEMENT-NEW POLICY Nebraska's goal posts, and five times they essayed goals from field. The first four were miserable failures. The fifth tied the score.

Nerved by their long postponed success, Ames started after the Cornhuskers again. Twice more they carried the ball well down into Nebraska's territory and again balked in their efforts to carry it across the line, tried for goals from the field. Both attempts were unsuccessful, but on the last one, after mussing up the pass for a kick from placement, Cy Lambert picked up the ball and wormed his way through the Cornhusker's line for the only touchdown of the game He tailed to kick goal.

With the score 9 to 4 against them, the Cornhuskers showed the stuff they were made of. Though only a few minutes remained for play, they went back to the fight once more with a determination that inspired the spectators almost to a frenzy.

The kickoff, which followed. Lambert's touchdown, resulted in a safety touchdown, which was wholly unearned by Nebraska. The two points scored on the play seemed like a vertiable godsend. A goal from the field, such as had given Nebraska the lead, would be sufficient to save the game. The rooters knew it and prayed with venemence to John Weller to come to the rescue once more. The players knew it and, though wellnigh exhausted, went after the lowans with greater zest than ever.

Taking the ball on the kickout, Nebraska resorted to the tactics which had succeeded so well for Ames. Cooke returned the kick twenty-five yards for a starter. Weller bucked the line and then from the forty-two yard line tried a drop kick. The kick fell short and Ames took the ball from the twenty-five-yard line. Here a forward pass failed, took the ball back fifteen yards, and forced a punt. Cooke worked a fake for twenty-five yards. Kroger took ten more. Nebraska carried the ball to Ames' eight yard line and threatened to score a touchdown. Ames braced, however, and kicked out
