Entered at the postoffice at Lincoln, Nebraska, as second-class mail matter under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

McCalls Magazine for March is on the exchange table. The girls may consult it without fear of over-dressing. Now that woman suffrage occupies their minds less weighty issues are forgotten.

The dress question never was one of life and death. There are as many different kinds of people in a large school like the University of Nebraska as there are in the average community of the same size. Those who wear overly fine clothes are public benefactors in that they set the fashion for some of their less particular sisters.

The few people who are working utmost indifference from subject to subject. The most distinguishing feature of the able student 's his ability to think on one thing at a time.

To the Editor of the Daily Nebraskan:
In the editorials from which we learned that no prospective P. B. K. does aught but study in the library nor does he behave himself in an indecorous manner in the halls, you neglected a few minor details that aid in the lubrication of the knowledge-grinder.

Ye ancient cloke of revered memory presented by the class of 1869, is molested semi-annually by a tinkerer. Nevertheless after about half an hour's agitation it (the clock) retires to a state of innocuous desuetude, wherein it has no discordant tick, tick, to disturb the "would-be" wise one. Facilities for absorbing knowledge in the stack room are unsurpassed. Let me explain. Suppose a book is wanted. By consulting the card index and following a few simple directions the student arrives before the shelf upon which Dr. Jewett has ordained that aforesaid book shall repose. Lo and behold, the book is not there! The student is now in an admirable location to absorb knowledge for he is flanked by stacks of books on almost any conceivable subject. If in the thirty minute search in this alcove for the missing book knowledge does not percolate through his cranium it is truly impervious.

The books in the library are picked up once or possibly twice a day and the possibility is very remote. Might not the percentage of P. B. Ks. possibly be raised if books were gathered every few hours as they used to be?

Respectfully
G. H. MATTESON, '09.

for some one else command more than the "lip loyalty" of their friends—they have their respect. Selfish people are always bluffers to a greater or less extent; they are not willing to go on their merits but must veneer themselves with self-advertisement. You can find any number of these "ambitious" people in school who want to do generous things, but always with the view of boosting themselves. They never truly succeed.

Rev. G. S. Smith of the University of Chicago, in a recent talk before the students of that institution proposed to abolish all examinations by questions substituting what he called a thought meter. He declined to discuss the practicability of the meter, but explained the principal of it. Degrees should be awarded according to the following schedule: One-half hour concentration, A. B.; one hour concentration, Ph. D. One of the major purposes of education is to enable students to hold their attention on one thing for a considerable length of time. Most people would be startled if they could read the workings of their own mind; they wander with the iversity have started a movement to break down the exacting class room requirements placed upon them. They claim that more is demanded of them than other institutions require of their athletes.

Majority Necessary.

It will require a majority of all votes cast at the coming junior class election, to nominate an editor-in-chief for next year's Cornhusker. This is the decision of President Guidinger, announced yesterday, when one of the candidates took the matter up with him for a decision.

It seems that both the Cornhusker constitution and also the constitution of the class of 1910 provide that a majority of all votes cast is necessary for an election. Nevertheless there are so many candidates for the office that some of them consider they will stand a better show of winning out if the nomination is secured by the largest number of votes on the first ballot. The position of the junior president is in strict accord with both constitutional expression of the class's will than would a nomination on a mere plurality vote.
