ANOTHER PAINTING.

"Canal of Bruges," by Charles Warren Eaton.

As a result of the art exhibition last winter and of the recent series of lectures by Dr. Powers, the Nebraska Art Association has been enabled to purchase another picture for the University gallery and to still have $700 left for further investment. The society gained $1,400 from the exhibition and $300 additional from the lectures.

With $1,000 of this fund the association bought the "Canal of Bruges," a painting by Charles Warren Eaton. This is regarded as one of the best works of Mr. Eaton, who is at present not represented in the Nebraska gallery. It was hung in the gallery during the exhibition and attracted much attention. Within a short time it will be returned to Lincoln and will be given a permanent place.

The officers of the association have not yet determined what to do with the remainder of their fund. Professor F. M. Fling said yesterday morning that the money might be held until next year, when additional receipts from the 1909 exhibition would enable the purchase of an unusually high grade picture. It is possible, however, that the amount may be put to some other use.

Before one of his classes yesterday morning, Professor Fling made an appeal to the Seniors that they maintain an interest in the University gallery after their graduation. He said that it was not unlikely that in the future the state legislature would be asked to aid the association. He thought it altogether fitting that here in Lincoln, where three thousand students come from all over the state in search of education and culture, there should be an art gallery worthy of the name. It is on the influence of Nebraska graduates who know the needs of the institution that any legislative movement will depend.
