great centers, making access for work among them easier. All the universities and almost all the high technical schools are non-residential.

The distinctly Russian class of students produce on a foreigner an impression that is not prepossessing. With the exception of a few dandies in the capitals, they are mostly extremely poor and crowd into the universities without financial means. In hope of finding work or lessons to live on, and many are almost starving. A foreigner will also be struck by the unrefinedness, lack of restraint, unreliability, lack of enterprise and of perseverance, and the more than loose way in which they regard the very worst forms of sin. The sense of right and wrong seems to be obliterated to a terrible extent.

But much must be said in favor of these students, to make up for these dark outlines. Russians are an emotional people, quick to feel and to act under impulses, open to the worst and to the best and highest influences. You will hardly anywhere find more warm-hearted, generous, unselfish people, once you have won their affections. They are willing to spend and be spent for a cause they have espoused. A woman student, living on fifty shillings a month, used to give twenty to her Social Democracy party. "What do you sacrifice?" is a usual question.—Baron Paul Nicolay, in "Student World."
