Will the Democrats shed "Brine"?
(Lyric.)

Minnesota students recently indulged in a class scrap. When President Northrop came out to remonstrate with them the fight was removed to a different part of the campus, where several Freshmen were chased up into the trees, but succeeded in escaping the pursuers by passing from tree to tree by the interlaced branches. It is said that this was the first fight in the higher altitudes since the Battle above the Clouds. At any rate, it as a monkey performance, for the persistence of the students was worthy of a better cause.

A young man once entering college was advised to be a "Joiner." The explanation which followed was not to unanimity in such matters. Each must apparently consider his personal and departmental interests first and these are so complicated as to prevent him from doing many things which may offend the interests of a fellow professor. It is upon the student body then that many things fall. And this is a good thing; for as composites of those we work with broadening interests of this nature make broader men and women.

Let us be "Joiners" in working for the best interests of Nebraska.

"Not many years ago," says the Boston Transcript, "it would have been accounted akin to heresy to propose for the president of an American university or college a man not a clergyman. Now the tendency seems to be toward choosing executives for the higher institutions of learning from the lay ranks. It seems reasonable to suppose that the profession of teaching, other things being equal, should afford a better training for this responsibility than the profession of divinity. Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Chicago universities have lay presidents, succeeding those taken from the clergy. Dean Roberts, just elected to the presidency of Colby college, is another instance, study books, but to study man. This was a good bit of advise. Student life at a state university like Nebraska offers unlimited chances for entering activities that help to school and give to the worker the great but incidental benefits coming to himself.

Everything that is for good deserves the attention and support of the students. But many fail to realize that the undergraduate has any responsibility in this respect. They are apt to feel that matters of school policy belong entirely to the faculty. Where is there an educator who would consider proposing the honor system unless the students favored it and would stand back of him? What faculty member at Nebraska would have undertaken the recent Athletic Board reform single-handed, or with the help of only his associates? Among members of the faculty there is very little and he won his promotion in competition with a popular clergyman. Professor Harry Garfield will at the beginning of the next college year succeed Reverend Dr. Hopkins at Williams and it is thus that the record is running."

Wisconsin's defeat in the track meet with Illinois was due to a hotel clerk, so it is said. The clerk failed to awaken Messmer, the weight star of Wisconsin, with the result that Messmer missed his train.

The annual election of officers of the Daily Illini, the eight-page daily paper of the students of the University of Illinois, resulted in the election of E. C. Rainey of Brubaker as editor and L. V. Eyhart of Urbana as manager. The Daily Illini has been put on a new basis, and is now under the con-
