THE UNIVERSITY.

A review of some of the things accomplished at Nebraska during the year 1907-08 reveals the fact that the institution is making wonderful progress.

In a material way there have been added several new buildings, both on the campus and at the Farm. The new Temple building in particular has added so much to the life of the students that many who were skeptical about accepting the gift from Mr. Rockefeller now look at the matter favorably. We are soon to have an engineering building that will make room for the great number of heretofore crowded students of this department. The new historical library, too, while not on the campus, will be a great addition to the University. The Museum has been re-installed in very respectable quarters that promise to increase as room is needed. At the Farm the new domestic science building represents a great triumph for those who have worked so hard toward this end. And next year we are to have a College of Education, which will add greatly to the strength of the University.

These, and many minor improvements, have all come within the last year. But there are others no less important. Fraternity life has been improved by the inter-fraternity council. Some of the bad features of rooming-house life have been abolished. The University, after years of dilatoriness, has been living up to the law this year and now furnishes books to the students "at wholesale prices, plus a reasonable cost for handling." Athletics have been put under a business management which accounts to a representative board of faculty and students. And finally there is to be a new system of registration, seeking to leave the choice of each half-year's work with the individual student, but advising and limiting him and giving him the opportunity to consider the matter three months before finally making his choice.

These advances in equipment and methods indicate beyond a doubt which way the University of Nebraska is moving. Some of the men who have done most for the school can remember when the enrollment was not over five hundred. In view of the advances that have been made under these men, who will attempt to predict the progress of our University in the future? Already its graduates are a power in the state and each year displaces the old skeptical forces on educational matters with those whose young energy and determination is devoted to the cause of higher education. The University's growth will be a geometrical progression.

To our Chancellor and Board of Regents, those members of the faculty who have done so much for young Nebraska, and those citizens with whom the University is an intimate interest, this growth ought to be a source of great gratification. State institutions of learning are taking the educational scepter and to those who guide Nebraska's destiny belongs the honor of developing one of the greatest of these.

Cascade Conference.

Two weeks from last night the University men who are going to attend the Student Conference at Cascade, Colorado, will leave over the Union Pacific. They will go to Valley, where connections will be made with the main line to Denver. Delegates from the other colleges of the state will join the party along the route. Special tourists cars have been arranged for, so all the students will be together. Cascade is situated in Ute Pass, part way up Pike's Peak, and is said to be one of the most beautiful spots in all the west. Several hundred students will be in attendance from colleges and universities throughout the west. The morning will be taken up with addresses given by some of the strongest speakers in the country, while the afternoons are given up to recreation. Contests will be held in baseball and track athletics to determine the best states. Nebraska University is endeavoring to send twenty-five men. At present seventeen have signified their intention of going. The opportunity is open to any student who wishes to attend. Special rates have been secured making this a rare opportunity.

Der Kindern in Guardhouse.

Secretary "Joe" Der Kinderin of the Y. M. C. A., who is in camp with the cadets at Nebraska City, was placed under arrest Thursday night, and taken to the guardhouse. Some cadet with a highly developed sense of humor lit some fire-crackers under "Joe's" tent and disappeared. When the guard appeared "Joe" was the only person around, and he was accordingly hustled off to the guardhouse.

Women and Government.

That the women at Nebraska are taking an increasing interest in public affairs is evidenced not only in the new Equal Suffrage Club, but in the records of the Political Science department as well. This department has been in existence but two years. The first semester of last year but four of every twenty-two students in the department were women; and the second semester five of each twenty. The first semester this year the percentage was twelve out of forty, and this semester fourteen to forty-seven. In other words, the percentage of women in the department has increased from 18 to 30 in two years.

Dramatic Club Try-outs.

Next semester the try-outs for membership in the Dramatic Club will be held earlier than usual. They will take place soon after the school opens. Anyone wishing to pick out something during vacation should get something along the dramatic line, as the try-outs will be almost wholly made up of this class of work.

Under the auspices of the Dramatic Club, the cast of the play "Welcome" went to Fairbury yesterday and presented their play last evening.

When the students return to school next fall they will not find fifty or sixty athletes practicing football on the campus, as is customary, but there will be some consolation in the fact that a new engineering building will be partially constructed, which will be a credit to Nebraska.

James Bednar goes to Wymore next week to address the alumni association of that city's high school. We warn that association.

Bohemian Lecture.

Prof. Bohumil Shimek, head of the Botany department of the Iowa State University will give a Bohemian lecture in U. 106 at 2:30 this afternoon. Professor Shimek has the reputation of being the most scholarly Bohemian lecturer in the United States. Students should not miss hearing him.

A reception will be given him in the evening at 525 North Twenty-fifth street.

Be In School Next Year

THE Daily Nebraskan

Wishes to Announce Its Plans

A balance of over $500.00 enables us to announce that THE DAILY NEBRASKAN will be increased in size next year to a paper of 16-in. columns, and one column will be added in width. This means over 40 per cent increase in actual space, and more than TWICE as much READING MATTER will be printed. The Subscription price WILL NOT BE CHANGED.

Emphasis will be given to special NEWS DEPARTMENTS such as Alumni, Society, Engineering, Medical, Law, Etc. The paper will be made attractive by the use of more cuts.

An Editorial Staff has been chosen capable of making the NEBRASKAN the best College Daily in the country.

Clyde E. Elliott, the new Editor-in-Chief has been connected with Nebraskan for two years and a half, serving one year of that time as Managing Editor.

Herbert W. Potter, who will be Managing Editor, has served as News Editor for one semester.

Lynn Lloyd, next year's Associate Editor, has handled the athletic department of the Nebraskan for the past semester.
