Football Games in the East

Today the unbeaten teams of Cornell and Pennsylvania clash on Franklin field, Philadelphia, and the same field will contain the Army and Navy elevens Saturday. From the standpoint of real football the Pennsylvania-Cornell affair will be the more important, but no game of the year will attract so much of society and the diplomatic and administrative life of the country as the Army-Navy game. In this respect the latter game is in a class by itself.

There is no doubt that the Pennsylvania-Cornell game will produce some of the very best football of the entire season. The Pennsylvania eleven by its great score against Michigan and its uniformly good record throughout the entire season has stamped itself as one of the best that ever wore the red and blue. The Quaker supporters even go so far as to say that a victory over Cornell will make them the champions of the east, which may or may not be true, according to the way one reads comparative scores.

The Odds on the Quakers.

On its record for the season the odds should certainly be on the Quakers, for they have shown strong scoring ability in practically every one of their games. To date only one team has been able to cross their goal line, this being the Indians. But since this game the Red and Blue has moved forward with great strides and its overwhelming defeats of Lafayette and Michigan surprised the supporters of the team as much as the elevens they trampled upon. This Pennsylvania eleven is not very heavy, but it is made up of men of the rangy type, full of speed, wiry and strong. And these are the characteristics of which championship teams are made.

The Cornell eleven is an enigma that will be solved only by the playing of the game. It was thought that the Ithacans would show the stuff of which they are made last week in their game against Chicago in which they were tied with a score of 6 to 6. But in this game the New Yorkers were content merely to hold their own, though they had expected to win the game. Up at Cornell their season is a failure or a success according as they win or lose to Pennsylvania. In all the long period of fifteen years that these two teams have been meeting each other Cornell has won only one game. So monotonous has become the series of Pennsylvania victories that some people have acquired the idea that Pennsylvania is unbeatable at the hands of Cornell. This year Cornell has made her greatest preparations to upset this theory.

The following is the record to date of the Penn-Cornell series:

1893—	Pennsylvania	50,	Cornell	0.
1894—	Pennsylvania	6,	Cornell	0.
1895—	Pennsylvania	46,	Cornell	2.
1896—	Pennsylvania	32,	Cornell	10.
1897—	Pennsylvania	4,	Cornell	0.
1898—	Pennsylvania	12,	Cornell	6.
1899—	Pennsylvania	29,	Cornell	0.
1900—	Pennsylvania	27,	Cornell	0.
1901—	Pennsylvania	6,	Cornell	23.
1902—	Pennsylvania	12,	Cornell	11.
1903—	Pennsylvania	36,	Cornell	0.
1904—	Pennsylvania	34,	Cornell	0.
1905—	Pennsylvania	6,	Cornell	5.
1906—	Pennsylvania	0,	Cornell	0.
1907—	Pennsylvania	12,	Cornell	4.

There is every reason that the Navy should rule favorite over the Army for their annual game. On the season's records the Navy has much the better of the argument. This, however, does not mean the soldier lads are going down to defeat. They have lost two years in succession to the sailors, and will take no chances this time. It is almost impossible to get a line on the relative strength of the two teams through the medium of comparative scores. Neither eleven has met a common opponent to permit this sort of a comparison.

The record follows:

1890—	Navy	24,	Army	0.
1891—	Army	32,	Navy	16.
1892—	Navy	12,	Army	4.
1893—	Navy	6,	Army	4.
1899—	Army	17,	Navy	5.
1900—	Navy	11,	Army	7.
1901—	Army	11,	Navy	5.
1902—	Army	22,	Navy	8.
1903—	Army	40,	Navy	5.
1904—	Army	11,	Navy	5.
1905—	Army	6,	Navy	6.
1906—	Navy	10,	Army	0.
1907—	Navy	6,	Army	0.

ANALYSIS OF YELLOW STORIES.

Chicago Professor Answers Absurd Football Article.

The following article was prepared by a Chicago professor for the Daily Maroon in answer to an absurd article which appeared in the Chicago Record-Herald last Sunday and which was a direct attack on college football:

"The hysterical desire of a Chicago alderman to legislate football out of Chicago, is an illustration of the annual post-season protest on the part of the uninformed. The honorable gentleman in question is not wholly representative, however, as he actually saw a game last Saturday. It is altogether likely that in addition to this he saw an absurd write-up occupying a full page in the Record-Herald of Sunday morning, November 15. This was entitled: 'Football casualties for 1908.'

"A preliminary statement called attention to the fact that of the victims enumerated below, exactly three hundred in number, many would bear their scars to the grave, while a large number of the remainder, after a week's agony, had finally been saved to further activity as by a miracle.

"Casual examinations of the list made it possible for one Sunday morning reader not to indulge in a little analysis of the statement and the list. A rapid checking of the list of 290 injured victims showed that fifty of them were given by name as belonging to the teams of fifteen colleges and universities which played in big games on Saturday, November 14. These colleges were: Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Brown, Wesleyan, Williams, Carlisle, Cornell, Chicago, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and De Pauw.

"A reference to the news section of this same issue of the paper developed some rather significant facts.

Of the list of fifty cripples, thirty-five played in the games of last Saturday afternoon; the great majority of these playing through the entire game, no less than ten being mentioned as spectacular heroes of their respective contests. These thirty-five men, according to the yellow list, were victims of broken shoulders, dislocated hips, sprained knees and ankles, internal injuries, all sorts of external facial and scalp wounds, and concussion of the brain.

"A second glance at the list showed that even this total of fifty was misleading as in five cases men had been listed more than once as being crippled on different days. Again, the list included at least two cases of men who do not belong to the squads of the colleges to which they were assigned and a fine array of misprints, which may or may not have had reference to the actual individuals further discredited the report. Making allowance for these various qualifying features, just about twenty per cent of the entire list should by any right have been therein included.

"Eight of the cripples played the game of their lives on the Chicago team; six contributed to Yale's victory over Princeton; but the scare-head article is read by the foes of football, and proposed legislation to put the game out of the athletic calendar is a natural result."
