With this issue of the Daily Nebraskan the paper suspends publication for the Easter recess. The next issue of the paper will be on Thursday, April 15.

All students who can find it possible should arrange to order their cornhusker before leaving for the Easter vacation. It will be a great convenience to the Cornhusker staff, as it will give them some definite idea of the number of books that will be required.

Interclass debating has at last become a permanent thing at the University of Nebraska and the interest which it has aroused is a guarantee that in the future it will play an important part in the life of the school. The formation of a permanent interclass debating board means that in the future there will be an organization already formed to conduct the debates and see that they are a success. The successful inauguration of interclass debate means vastly more than a new interclass activity has been preciation of the other than between the East and the West. While this is true, a great number of students come from the East every year to attend the universities of the West and get the Western viewpoint. In time this can only result in the growth of a better relationship between the two races and a broader appreciation by both of the problems of the other.

There was a time when a foreign student found the conditions under which he was forced to work in American colleges so disagreeable as to be almost unbearable. He was the constant butt of all the jokes of the student body and was ostracized from taking part in student activities. This attitude is far from that which the foreigner encounters at the University of Nebraska, and it is hardly possible that such race prejudice still finds a place in any of the other larger universities of the country. The attendance of foreigners is a thing to be encouraged by any university as every opportunity which the student has of coming in contact with different ideas and conceptions can only result in broadening his own view.

CHANGES OF OPINION.

According to a recent editorial in the Evening Wisconsin, Henry Clews, the famous New York financier, has changed his views in regard to the importance of a college education. While he formerly declared that a college education was a waste of time, he now declares that a man should get all the education that he can.

Henry Clews is a well known New Yorker who has been identified with the activities of Wall street for more than a generation. He is an entertaining writer, if not a profound one, on financial topics. Not a few Americans regard him as a representative business man. In that character he expressed himself some years ago to

WORKING FOR PEACE.

There is one way in which the universities of the world are playing an important part in the promotion of international peace that is seldom recognized and is not appreciated at its true importance. Controversies and disputes of all kinds proceed from misunderstandings, and this is as true of wars as of any other kind of misunderstanding. In the interchange of students which is constantly taking between all the great nations of the world a better understanding each of the other is being developed and thus a powerful element in favor of universal peace is constantly at work through the universities.

A large number of Americans go each year to study in the great universities of Germany and England. These nations, on the other hand, send many students to this country and through the interchange it is made more possible for each to see the other as it is.

In no case is the value of this interchange more striking than in the case of the Far East. Between different races and different nations there could hardly be less understanding and ap-the effect that it was a waste of time for any boy destined for a business career to go to college. Now, however, Mr. Clews advises young men to get all the education possible, and advocates a financial course in every college conducted by a man who has had actual experience in the financial world.

"I will believe," says Mr. Clews, "that a bright graduate from a high school can be placed on a par with the college man at the beginning of their business careers; but the higher education gives its possessor great advantage in after life."

The upshot of the whole matter is that knowledge is power, and that every young man who has an opportunity to secure knowledge by taking a collegiate course will do well to embrace it.

Alpha Chi Omega gave a banquet last night to Maud Powell, the distinguished violinist. The latter is also a member of the national college equal suffrage league, and would probably have been banquitted by the equal suffrage girls if she had not been by her fraternity. Miss Powell joined the college equal suffrage ranks at Seattle, at the same time with Madame Nordica, the noted prima donna.
