SEVENTY-ONE GO OUT

RECEIVE THEIR CERTIFICATES OF GRADUATION.

AVERY COMMENCEMENT ORATOR

SPEAKS ON "AGRICULTURE AND HUMAN PROGRESS."

Declares That Progress of Agricultural Science in Past Few Years Points the Way to Remarkable Future for All People.

Seventy-one students in the college of agriculture received their certifiactes of graduation at the seventh annual commencement of that department of the university last evening. The graduating exercises were held in Memorial hall and were attended by a crowd that jammed the building. Acting Chancellor Samuel Avery was commencement orator.

Preceding Chancellor Avery's address, the university chorus, and Miss Annette Abbott rendered musical numbers. Following the address, Mahlon Saxton pleased the audience with a violin solo, after which the graduation certificates and military commissions were presented.

Speaking on "Agriculture as Related to Human Progress," Chancellor Avery said in part:

"Ancient civilization first developed in a few spots of the earth, particularly to primitive agriculture. But for centuries this labor was without scientific application or knowledge. The first twenty years of the last century presented efforts in this direction which were put forth without great practical results, but efforts without which the later successes would have been impossible. From 1830 to 1850 we find years rich in pioneer work for scientific agriculture, rich in the beginnings of discoveries.

"The next few years brought forth a puzzle. Science had brought us into partial control of the agricultural situation. We at least understood where we were at, but we faced the constantly diminishing returns of the soil and were forced to conclude that the elements of fertility were becoming exhausted. Now we are learning how to overcome this loss and restors the fertility of the soil. The agricultural progress of the last few years has been one of the wonders of our age.

"The time has come when agricultural investigations can command the services of some of the choicest spirits in the world. Looking ahead I feel that the agricultural future of gions. The parts of the state now occupied by the sand hills will be covered with pine forests, and the strip of country lying between the mouth of the Rhine and the foot of the Alps.

"The conditions to prevail in Nebraska we may expect to prevail in the whole world, for knowledge, particularly agricultural knowledge, is becoming universal. Knowledge is converting all countries of the world into places of abode where humanity can thrive and prosper. Almost every land and clime-will soon be capable of supporting a splendid civilization. When mankind has progressed to such an extent that every part of the earth is made to yield its best to his welfare, the agricultural millenium will have arrived,

"Young ladies and gentlemen, you telong to the first decade of agricultural graduates of this school. You are peculiarly fortunate in that you have taken your course of study after the school has lasted long enough to have acquired a school consciousness, to have formed ideals and traditions and yet you have studied in the firs flush of the splendid growth of th school. Schools are like nations. They frequently produce in the exuberance of youth, a race of giants.

"Addressing the last word to you, have then, nothing further to say than this: Live and labor in accordance with the ideals you have here received to be worthy of your place in the succession of graduates to go forth from the University of Nebraska's school of agriculture."

harder conditions. The industries of the country were prostrate, the financial interests of the state were desperate. The legislatures of both 1891 and 1895 appropriated almost a quarter of the state's revenues to aid drough sufferers. Settlers were leaving the western counties by thousands. Unwearily the new chancellor traveled over Nebraska, speaking wherever an audience was assured, and preaching always the evangel of opportunity, as offered by the board of regents, and long before provided by the founders of the state. Thus, in four years, he saw an institution of less than five hundred students grow into the true university of a million people. Withal, he organized and enlarged forces, and extended its benefits to students far beyond the shadow

'He was of the finest type of American manhood, and one of the best gifts of the old New England college to the West in the proneer days of Western education. All his life long. he served his fellow man, and nowhere more joyously or successfully than among us in Nebraska. His dreams were not of his own greatness, but of the greatness and helpfulness of the university which he served, and he rejoiced as he marked it, full of promise, taking shape before his eyes. To others he gave with gladness the best there was in him, and he asked for no return. Of such a man, the noblest memorial remains in the hearts of the thousands of young men and women whom he loved and inspired, and who remember him with gratitude, and affection. On him the world may say, with rare truthfulness. He was loved by his fellows."

THE BOARD OF REGENTS MEET

Make Important Appropriations for University.

The board of regents met yester day morning and finished consider ation of the financial budget for the next year. A total appropriation of $581,000 was divided as follows: $362,-162 for salaries, and $164,864, for current expenses of the maintenance of the university. Fifty thousand dollars has also been set aside to be used in equipping the new engineering building which is now in course of construction. This latter amount will be Nebraska is singularly fair and bright, spent for machinery, including founda-I predict that the time will come when | tions, and other material which will the level plateaus of the West will be necessary for the various kinds be among our richest agricultural re- of work in the engineering classes. An appropriation was also made for the erection of a new green house on the university campus.
