If this hot weather continues a bit longer, it will be in order to put back those straw hats. Any objections?

Nebraska students have a habit of remaining loyal to their alma mater after graduation. Witness the reunions held periodically at Seattle, Wash., New York City and now at Madison, Wis.

There is no place like the old home for the man who has drifted away and been busied with worldly affairs for a period of years. Professor Fling's tribute to New England as paid in yesterday's convocation address illustrates the old truth. Professor Fling has traveled in many countries since he left New England twenty years ago, but he finds his birthplace still one of the most beautiful of all the scenes that he has visited.

THE CADET UNIFORMS.

The Daily Nebraskan has been criticised by members of the Pershing Rifles for the publication in yesterday's issue of a news article giving the facts of the dispute which has existed between that organization and a downtown clothing firm over the sale of cadet uniforms. The Pershings think that the article attacked their organization and was favorable to the city salesmen. This is quite naturally not to their liking.

In such a case it is not an easy matter to distinguish between the sympathies which one may feel for one of the parties to the controversy and the legal rights which exist under the rules and customs of the university. The news article in question did not attempt to relate the sympathies of the Nebraskan; that is not a function of the news columns of this paper. The story attempted to relate the facts at issue. If the facts of the case did not favor the Pershings then they have reason to say that the article was unfavorable to their cause.

Aside from its news space, the Nebraskan does have sympathies, and in this case its sympathies are with the Pershings. They have endeavored to undertake the sale of the uniforms for chancellor could not rightly grant.

It is a pity that the Pershings should be undersold in the uniform matter. There is no reason to believe that they have exacted more than a nominal profit for the sale of the suits. Their accounts have been inspected by the auditing committee of the student organizations and found correct in every particular. They are of course unable to meet cut-price competition because they cannot sell their goods at a loss, as can their competitors.

They are entitled to the sympathy of the students, but as a matter of legal right, the Nebraskan maintains that the Pershings cannot object to competition on their own ground.

The death of Duke Trimble, the Indiana guard, at a hospital only a few blocks from where his teammates were beating DePauw last Saturday is a duplicate of what frequently happens in more important affairs of life. Often is man removed from earthly existence just as he is about to reach that for which he has long striven for. Trimble had looked forward with a great deal of anticipation to the work which he expected to do in the 1909 season as a crowning glory to his past athletic record. But he was taken before he achieved that which he wished, even as are others in other fields of life.

SEASON TICKETS.

Manager Eager announces that he does not intend to beg university students to purchase the season athletic tickets which he has just placed on sale. He believes that the student's regard for his own personal advantage should cause him to buy the tickets without other urging than that given by the benefit to his pocketbook.

In this Manager Eager is undoubtedly right. The great advantage of the $3 tickets is that accruing to the students. The athletic board, by making the $3 rate, set a price which is far below the combined cost of even a few of the contests to be held. Practically the only advantage that the board gains is the receipt of the money early in the season, when otherwise they might have to wait for some of it till later in the year. The low price may also influence more students to attend the game than would otherwise do so, but they do this because of the advantage to themselves; the board gains merely thru the gain to the individual students.

From every point of view—and particularly from that of his own pocketbook—the student should take advantage of Eager's offer.

the good of the cadet purchasers and of the university as a whole. The sympathies of every student should be with them in the difficulty which they have encountered.

But, viewing the legal aspects of the matter, and the right of sales on the campus, the Nebraskan feels that the Pershings were wrong in their attempt to secure a monopoly of the uniform business. They undoubtedly have no wrong intention, and it is very probable, as they allege, that an agreement with a former commandant was relied upon to make the organization the official purveyor of uniforms. But no officer of the university has the right, without the special sanction of the board of regents, to favor one sales-agent at the expense of another.

The Pershings say that they are a student organization and that they do not come under the provision of the sales regulations. But immediately any student organization enters into a business relation with other students it becomes a business agent and subject to the same rules which govern other business agents. When the Pershings began to sell uniforms, they lost their identity, insofar as the uniforms were concerned, as a student society, and became a merchandising company. That being so, if they were allowed to sell uniforms on the campus, any other merchant has the same right.

When the competition of the downtown firm was threatened the Pershings could still appeal to the sympathies of the students and to their good judgment in purchasing their suits. Members of the organization claim that their uniforms were the best of the two. In that case this fact could be used to attract purchasers just as it would be used by any city merchant. If the Pershings desired the support of the students because they were a student organization, the members could make this appeal to the sympathies of their fellows. But in trying to have the downtown agent put off the campus, the Pershings asked something which the
