A mistake of '100,000 in estimating the number of specimens in a botanical collection is a big miss. But it is best to be conservative rather than capable of exaggeration. The feeling experienced when one finds that he has underestimated his work is quite different from that which one goes through when he discovers that he has boasted too much.

ture. No action whatever can be taken for at least a year and in that case the expediency of extending the campus southward would have to be proven.

By a curious typographical error in the Nebraskan of yesterday Registrar Harrison was caused all kinds of trouble. The Nebraskan was delivered to faculty subscribers shortly after ten o'clock and within half an hour the procession started for the registrar's office. It seemed, according to the statements of the professors, that a series of figures had been printed which accredited them with all sorts of fancy enrollment figures. Dean Davis, for instance, found that there were over 2,000 students in his college. Instead of that number in the whole university. Dean Richards was correspondingly surprised to find an enrollment considerably above the actual figure ascribed to his college. As a matter of fact the figures were those of another university, considerably larger than Nebraska. By some error the name of the school was omitted from the article and consequently Registrar Harrison was besieged. Incidentally it showed that the Nebraskan is read.

THE MEDICAL COLLEGE.

The reorganization of the medical college along the plans announced in yesterday's Nebraskan indicates the intention of the board of regents to take plenty of time in selecting a successor to Dean H. B. Ward. The regents have unofficially agreed to leave Professor R. H. Wolcott as acting dean of the college for an indefinite period, the understanding being that he will probably hold the office until the close of the present school year.

Acting Dean Wolcott is an efficient executive and there need be no fear that the department of medicine will deteriorate under his management. With such an arrangement as is now announced in operation, the regents can take plenty of time in looking about for a successor to the deanship, in case they should decide to appoint a man outside of the present faculty. The position is one which requires ability of a high order, if Nebraska is to continue along the progressive lines which she has followed during the past several years. Any hit-or-miss action on the part of the regents in picking a man to succeed Dean Ward would be greatly regretted, and friends of the school who had fears last summer that some such thing would be done, will rejoice at the present situation.

pronounced by some to be the "best" election that class has ever had. The class of 1911 has seen some hot political campaigns with lots of mud-slinging. The contest just closed was marked for its quiet canvass devoid of disagreeable personalities. And the vote was close enough to make it interesting.

Minnesota doesn't think much of Nebraska's football team just now. The Minnesota Daily has the following to say of the game last Saturday:

"Nebraska as a team doesn't look half as dangerous as the name does. North Dakota held them to a tie score last week, and North Dakota has never been considered a dangerous possibility. It doesn't look as though even a three dollar rate will pack the train to Omaha on the 16th."

Better not be too sure, Minnesota. Nebraska has fooled you once or twice before.

The rumor that the university regents were contemplating the purchase of ground south of the present campus was widespread yesterday and Wednesday. One man yesterday claimed that he had authority from a member of the board of regents for the story. It is not likely, however, that anyone connected with the university would make any serious reference to an immediate extension of the campus southward. The university campus is going to be extended—radically extended—and that before so very many years. The people of this state are coming to realize more and more the worth of the university to the commonwealth as a whole and they will not long see it cramped with inadequate facilities. But the present rumor is undoubtedly prema-

COLLEGE FARM HANDS.

A Kansas farmer on a large scale is quoted as saying that the best farm hands are college students who are working their way through school and want to make all they can during the summer. That statement in itself is something of a retort to the unthinking class who argue that college life unfits the boy for the practical work of the man.

As a matter of fact the young man who is working his way through school or college is generally good most anywhere you put him. He has taken an advanced position in comparison with other boys not so favored as to be thrown upon their own resources early in life. He learns early the lessons of duty and responsibility. He is first to grasp the meaning of the terms, persistence and application, and he does not give up when the sun beats down hot and the grind tries his nerve.

It is something of an admission for the farmer to make regarding the college student, when conceding that he is the best available timber for the hard work of the harvest field. Time was when the "greenhorn" with white arms and face did not appeal to the farmer in a practical way. He didn't look business-like, and it appeared as though he were hardly worth educating in the field and in the weedpatch, in the corn row or on the straw stack. The point of view is different now and the college boy is regarded with interest by those who once thought he was wasting his time with Latin and Greek. He has more chance to pick his place in the practical world where the advantage of training and development in higher education appeals nowadays to every shrewd employer.—Omaha World-Herald.
