"Solid Gold Footballs to Members of the Team." No, child, they are not of regulation size, merely watch charms.

A new story is told of one popular Nebraska professor. It seems that he was giving his class a written test, and the hour was a tedious interval for him with nothing to do. So what did he do but go up to the blackboard and practice writing his name in full, in part full, and in brief, in all the various styles and curves known and unknown to good penmanship.

WE MUST BEAT DOANE.

"We must beat Doane."

The athletic board now announces that a section of the grandstand will be roped off for the girls alone and that co-eds will be admitted to these seats without extra charge. Quite naturally the board members expect that their action will result in a larger attendance of girls at the coming games. They should not be disappointed.

HALLOWE'EN FESTIVALS.

The Union Literary Society held its annual Halloween festival last evening and the members of the organization disported themselves in informal fashion at Epworth park. Undoubtedly they had a good time. Halloween is an old, old holiday, but invariably it possesses enough novelty to give young and old much pleasure at its annual visit.

It is such an event as that of the lits last evening which gives the university student the memories to be treasured after he leaves the scenes of their happening. Such informalities as that at Epworth park are remembered longer than are the tasks of the classrooms or the more formal meetings on varied occasions. It is the informality of such a stunt which counts. In that there is real pleasure and of it this university should have more.

ACCOMMODATING PROFESSORS.

There are to be found in this university professors of divers sorts and kinds. There are teachers who have tion could have given the required items in considerably under five minutes and without moving from his chair. Did he do it? Not at all. He informed the student that he had no time to fool with the matter; that if any information was had it must be gotten elsewhere. In all of which he did not stop to consider that his refusal meant an hour's hard work by the student to get the news from other sources, and that even then the article, as published elsewhere in this issue, benefited his college much less than if the news had been obtained first hand.

It is this sort of men that students cannot like, much less respect. Faculty professors are human beings just as are other men; they are not tin gods on little pedestals.

The Engineering Society met Wednesday evening, and routine business was gone through, followed by one of the usual joint discussions on engineering progress. A number of new men were voted in, and the report of the smoker committee was read. It showed a debit of about $12 from the first smoker of the year.

With the exception of Professor Richard's office, the last of the M. E. department left the mechanical arts building last Tuesday, when Professor Dean vacated the office he has had in M104. Miss Hrbek, head of the department of Slavonic languages, will occupy it as soon as it is remodeled, which is being done now by the addition of a steel ceiling and several coats of paint.

How farcical has this phrase become! A mere joke, it is now cast about the campus to be laughed at. But there was a time when it was not a joke. A few years ago, before Nebraska had blazed its way to the foreground of western football, Doane was an antagonist to be feared. A victory over the Crete collegians at that time was not an easy matter by any means and the game was not called a "practice contest."

Doane was then a feared rival; now it is a "minor college." The difference in the attitude towards the Crete school then and now typifies the growth of Nebraska in football and in other things. No longer can any private college of the state consider itself on a par with the state university. The institution of the people occupies a field by itself at the topmost pinnacle of the state's educational system. As it leads in football, so it leads in scholastic performances and in all else which goes to make a strong, well-rounded institution of learning.

"We must beat Doane." Though the phrase is a jest, let not the Doane men think it is used in haughtiness or slightly. It merely symbolizes the growth of the university and for that reason the thought is one which makes the student glad. But for the students of Doane, Nebraska has the same respect which she has always entertained.

BLEACHERS FOR GIRLS.

The decision of the athletic board to provide bleachers for the coeds is a fitting recognition of the status of the girls in university athletics. Heretofore but little care has been given the needs of the girls at football and other games. Consequently girls who went to games unattended found it almost a necessity to sit in the reserved seat section of the stands, at an increased expense.

taught two score of years and more, who are yet as youthful and full of ambition as when they started out their work as minor instructors. There are men who possess great breadth of view, men whom hard work does not sour, men who in the happiness and unselfishness of their lives achieve the highest respect of their neighbors. These are the men who are an inspiration and a pleasure as well to the university student. Their whole-souled strength, and their versatile broad-mindedness cannot but appeal to the best that there is in the young man.

But on the other hand there are in Nebraska, as in other universities, a few men who are noted for their crebbled irascibility, their utter failure to appreciate that wholesome unselfishness which distinguishes the man of parts. It is such as these who fail to develop the love of the alma mater which should come to every alumnus. These are the men who the student doesn't care to boast about to his friends, but rather tends to keep in the background.

There is probably no one student organization in the university which comes more closely in contact with the individual members of the faculty than does the Daily Nebraskan. In its task in gathering the news of the university, the staff of the paper meets the professors in a way in which the average student never knows them. And the knowledge which the Nebraskan reporters gain of the character of the instructors is various and interesting. Incidentally some ideals and ideas are shattered.

For instance, a Nebraskan reporter yesterday called up one of the leading professors of the university and asked for certain information relative to the registration of students in his department next week, when the winter term of the college of agriculture opens. The professor in ques-
