WHOSE MOVE NEXT?

The disgruntled element of the sophomore class, which recently attempted to deprive President Powers of the functions which custom has long given his office, now asks The Nebraskan, "Whose move next?" and "What's the move?"

From the attitude adopted in the letter published yesterday, the faction there represented doubts its ability to run its own affairs, for, being wholly impersonal in all their actions, these sophomores cannot of course have stooped to sarcasm in making their appeal for The Nebraskan's advice. Supposing, then, that the appeal was made in all sincerity, The Nebraskan agrees that the faction in question is in need of advice.

But, on the other hand, when it comes to giving advice for the direction of the future movements of the protestants, The Nebraskan begs to be this way, and it seems in such manner only, can the indiscriminate littering of the campus with all sorts of posters be stopped. At 8:30 yesterday morning, shortly after the innocents finished their exploitation of the football rally by the handbill method, the campus for a considerable distance from each gate looked like a dumping ground for waste-paper. If the students will not take enough care to put the bills in proper receptacles when they are through with them, by all means, chain 'em.

POPULARIZE THE OLYMPICS.

With the announcement of preliminary plans for the freshmen-sophomore Olympics, university students should begin an endeavor to popularize the event so that there may be no danger of its falling to attract as great or greater interest than last year.

The Olympics was a new affair last fall and its novelty assured the interest of the classes concerned as well as a general university interest. This year the novelty has somewhat worn off, but interest in the event should not be allowed to decline.

The Olympics, if continued as a traditional event of this university, will be peculiarly Nebraska's own. So far as is known no other university has a similar system of competition between the two lower classes. Other schools have pushball contests, rushes, cane fights, and similar events, but none has anything which compares with the Nebraska Olympics.

In preparing for the Olympics, the committees of the various classes, and particularly those of the two classes interested, should be given all aid required from individual students.

THE SPIRIT THAT WINS.

Nebraska meets Kansas tomorrow. Cornhuskers and Jayhawkers will fight for a grid-iron supremacy which not only means the settlement of their own disputed prestige, but which in all probability carries with it the title to the Missouri Valley championship. For two weeks Coach Cole and his assistants have been endeavoring to weld the Nebraska team into a semblance of the perfect mechanism which is necessary if Coach Kennedy's men are to be given the trouncing which Nebraska's honor demands. Now, with the conflict only a day in the future, the factor which will sway the contest to Nebraska or to Kansas is seen even more clearly than before.

A week ago observing sidelines declared that only a real Nebraska spirit, the spirit which held Minnesota to a tie score last year, the spirit which insists on a gamy game to the very end, the spirit which calls for victory and which will not be satisfied by anything less when Kansas is the rival—such a spirit as this, said the watchers, was the only thing which could win for the Scarlet and the Cream.

Since that time this fact has been borne more and more upon the understanding of those close in touch with the game. A fighting spirit, ready to take advantage of every chance that the Jayhawkers' weakness affords, making openings where none appear, is the thing which will win for Nebraska tomorrow. That is what Nebraska must have without fail.

excused. Its function is not to aid class politicians out of hot water, and it seems that that is just where the insurgents have logically landed themselves. Whatever advice The Nebraskan has will be found in its first mention of the subject in the issue of November 3. Its opinions at that time were not based upon personalities, but upon the logic of the situation. Inasmuch as no logical argument has been developed by any occurrence or publication since then on the opposite side of the question, there is nothing more to say. Before the insurgents can prove the justice of their position, they must show that President Powers had not appointed his committees before the class meeting. Under present conditions, The Nebraskan believes that appointments are made whenever the president makes up his mind to them, since no formal notification has ever yet been a rule of university classes.

The Nebraskan, therefore, still believes that the best move for the insurgents is no move at all. The only way in which they can regain the confidence of outside observers and remove the stigma of being accused of personal prejudice is to keep still and bide the proper time for such reforms as they desire. This is not the time.

CHAIN 'EM.

The Nebraskan has a suggestion to make to organizations which may in the future find it necessary to peddle bills about the campus. It is that hereafter they tie a chain to each bill handed out and fasten its other end to the person to whom it is given. In

They should find no difficulty in obtaining plenty of men to represent the two classes in the various events of the series.

OFFICERS' CLUB OFFICERS.

Battalion Organization Meets and Elects Men to Run Affairs for the Year.

On the invitation of Captain Bartlett, now in charge of the target practice of the university cadets, the commissioned officers of the battalion met at his home, 1227 G street, Wednesday evening to form a constitution, and to effect an organization. The greater number of the men were present, and the officers chosen were: President, Major Dirks; vice-president, Captain Schmidt; secretary, Captain Upson. Captain Coulter was elected master of ceremonies of the forthcoming officers' hop.

Following this was an elaborate banquet, furnished by the host. As toastmaster, Captain Bartlett called on several representative men of the battalion and also Chaplain Brooks and General Swartz for remarks. All especially emphasized the need of organization and the stimulation of rivalry and enthusiasm in the companies.

DENVER NEBRASKANS ORGANIZE.

University Graduates Form a Club With Thirty Members.

A University of Nebraska club was formed in Denver on the evening of October 29, when thirty alumni of the state university met and organized. A good time was had by the "old grads" with cider and doughnuts as the "feed" of the evening. At future meetings more definite plans will be adopted for booming Nebraska uni in the Colorado capital.
