POSTER THIEVES.

The action of some unknown student or students in breaking the glass in the University hall bulletin board and stealing the poster advertising the junior hop cannot be condoned under any code of honor. The excuse that the theft was a joke and is therefore permissible under the loose college standards which admit of almost anything under the cover of "fun" does not hold in the present case.

The junior hop poster was an artistic bit of work. It had occupied the time and skill of the artist and it was worth something to him. It was not the property of any class, but of an individual. In order to stop the actions of those who might think it fun to take such posters, the cardboard was locked in a case made for the purpose. It was thought that the necessity of breaking up property in order to reach the poster would certainly deter would-be jokesters.

But apparently there are some in this university who care more for their own personal enjoyment than for the rights of property or the feelings of fellow students. Both are injured in the poster theft. The culprit should recognize his wrong and take the only chance open to repair it. That is, the return of the poster. Let him leave it in the Nebraska office or in some other place where it can be found by the hop chairman, and in this way show that he still has some sense of right.

The University of Wisconsin baseball team has returned from a trip through Japan which occupied several weeks. The Badgers played many games with the little brown men and won a good percentage of the contests.

Such excursions as this are certainly to be commended. Whether the trip is made primarily for educational purposes or for the athletic glory of the school involved, the educational value to both the travelers and the people visited cannot be great. The men who went to Japan as representatives of Wisconsin athletics have returned with increased knowledge of the far eastern country and with added respect for its inhabitants. In their attitude towards the problems existing and to exist between this country and Japan they will be enabled to form more just conclusions by reason of their actual contact with the people concerned. Not only are they themselves benefited, but their fellow-students are benefited indirectly through knowledge of their views.

Wisconsin's state university has done many unique things in the past twenty years. In taking the present advanced ground the institution is making another forward step.

DISRESPECT TO AGGIES.

Agricultural college students at Minnesota recently held a mass meeting to protest against the disrespect which is common among university students in calling them "Aggies." They seem to think that the term is not indicative of the worthy character of their calling and of the reverence in which their fellow students should be held.

"Aggies" disrespectful? Then why not "Laws" and "Medics"? The slang abbreviation applied to the agricultural students is of exactly the same nature as that given the medical men. Yet we hear no objection from the latter. While "Laws" is not an abbreviated term, it has exactly the same status as "Aggies," the only reason for its being left whole being due to the fact that it is past abbreviation.

If the Minnesota "Aggies" think that students should stop to call them "agriculturalists" every time they wish to mention the aggregation, they are mightily mistaken. The very abbreviation indicates a sort of friendliness and informality much more to be desired than the iciness of the longer term.

Professor Howard sees the western greatness through a sociological viewpoint. Other professors in other lines of activity have prophesied the same thing and they have backed their predictions with reasoning from their own individual positions as the exponents of varying particular branches of learning.

Such optimism as this is good to bear. Casting aside the question of the correctness of the prophecies, not because their truth is doubted but merely because the point is too complicated for present discussion, the fact still remains that such statements are encouraging. They are the right sort of statements to be made by university professors in the classroom. Too frequently the university man, in his critical analysis of conditions about him, forgets to praise and falls into pessimism. Optimism is the thing to be taught, and such talks as that of Professor Howard has the right tendency.

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the students are operating a gold stamp mill. Each man in the class is being given an opportunity to work in the various positions of weigher, inspector, amalgamator, vanner, inspector, skelter, etc. The gold ore used is worth $30 a ton, and is from Nova Scotia.
