FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1909.

Nebraska occupies a unique place in the relation of the mass of the people to higher education and especially to the state university. There is an attendance at the university of one student for every 300 people. The proportion in Kansas is approximately 1 to 660, in Illinois 1 to 1,200, and in Ohio it is 1 to 2,000. When the attendance in other institutions above the high school is taken into account it speaks much for the spirit of the people of Nebraska.—University Journal.

ditional custom, and it is to be hoped that it will be accorded without difficulty. Every freshman and sophomore who can possibly find an hour's time should be at Nebraska field tomorrow morning to aid in upholding the honor of his class.

DRAMATIC TRYOUTS.

The University Dramatic Club held a tryout for the selection of new members last evening, the results of which will be announced today. By this process new students are elected to membership in the club and the best dramatists of the school are enabled to work together in mutual assistance.

The value of the dramatic club is not realized by a large proportion of Nebraska students. Its work is such that many do not come in contact with it and too frequently its public productions are not given the attention that they deserve. But the club is consistently working each year towards the formation of a better dramatic art in the university and its members have the satisfaction of each year seeing an increase in the standards followed.

The University of Nebraska is still a comparatively young institution and that perhaps accounts for some of the indifference towards the drama the demand for room was so pressing and the scarcity of money so great that the aim of the builders was to merely construct such structures as would give the greatest service for the least money. Room was needed, and structural strength and beauty were secondary considerations. Consequently the university has now inherited a conglomerate mass of architectural nightmares, many of which are not even useful from a standpoint of strict utility, let alone their esthetic character.

But the time has now come when the condition existent should be remedied. The state is fully recovered from all signs of economic depression, and it is well able to stand the expense entailed in properly founding a new campus. Within the next two years the people should come to realize the need and appreciate the results to be gained by inaugurating a new system of campus construction. Then they will be ready to act.

Notice.

The members of the classes in botany desiring to purchase the pamphlet "An Outline of Plant Phyla," which is an abridgement of Dr. Bessey's "Synopsis of Plant Phyla," may do so, as they are on sale at the Temple book store from now on.

HOLDING CLASSES OVER.

Students are undoubtedly to blame for many things in which the students can about many things, but there are a properly call their instructors to order. One of these is the manner in which some professors persistently hold classes over the time limit assigned to their instruction.

The university authorities have provided schedules allowing fifty minute periods for each class. To facilitate adherence to the schedules bells are rung in each of the buildings on the campus to give warning of the closing time for the various classes. Yet in spite of the recognized system, there are a number of professors who daily hold their pupils past the time limit, thereby inconveniencing not only the students but the instructors of the class to which they come late as a result of tardy dismissal of the first.

Students have their rights and privileges, and the professors who acknowledge this and act accordingly will not infringe on the time system originated by their own authority.

SUPPORT THE OLYMPICS.

The interest being manifested by the two lower classes in preparing for the annual Olympics to be held tomorrow morning is a good indication of university spirit. The Olympics were designed last year as a means of arousing real class and university spirit, and at the same time settling the question of class supremacy in a systematic and sensible manner. The system of contests then inaugurated and perpetuated this year provided for tests of athletic prowess and for enough of a "free-for-all" nature to satisfy the desires of the under classmen for a "rough-house." At the same time promiscuous fighting was prevented and property damage obviated.

This is only the second year of the Olympics, and therefore the support being given the tradition is doubly welcome. Continued interest will be needed to make the Olympics a tra-and like branches of art. But in eastern colleges, longer founded, the drama has a leading place in undergraduate activities. Some of the biggest events of the collegiate year in the older universities are the dramatic productions. It is to be hoped that the Nebraska dramatic club will continue to succeed in this direction until here too the drama will occupy its proper place as an educational medium.

MORE ALUMNI CLUBS.

Within a week has come the news of the organization of two University of Nebraska alumni clubs, one in South Dakota and the other in Denver. Already there are such associations in many of the large cities of the country, Washington and Seattle being notable examples.

The idea of alumni clubs scattered over the country is a good one. Not only are the ideals and memories of the alma mater perpetuated by these organizations of alumni, but the state itself is given valuable advertising through the efforts of its university graduates. The university and the state are inseparably bound together. That which helps on helps the other, and in this instance both profit.

Let us see more such clubs founded throughout the country. Eventually it is not impossible that we may have a national league of alumni clubs, by which a central organization may direct the workings of the alumni of all cities. At least such an end is worth thinking about.

A BETTER CAMPUS.

With the dinner of the faculty club last Wednesday evening a movement was launched which means much to the university. The expressions there made by faculty members, citizens of the state, and architect, indicate a growing desire on the part of all connected with the university for a better structural equipment.

The University of Nebraska has grown too fast for its builders to keep up with its progress. Ten years ago
